While this is an era of extremely high prices, nevertheless, there is a general feeling of doubt as to the ability of the Michigan Bean Growers' Association to maintain the price scale that they have arbitrarily fixed, to wit: $5 to the grower, increasing 15 cents a month to the first of the year, and thereafter $5.50.

This is one of the first fruits of the Clayton Bill, the special class exemption granted by that act to labor organizations and farmers' associations being the only thing which stands between the individual members of the Michigan Bean Growers' Association and the vengeance of the law. Logical development of this movement will soon bring us to the cry, "Twenty-five cent milk or let the baby starve!"

However, it seems as if a special Providence takes care of this country even if our laws do permit agreements in restraint of trade. This seems to have been a good bean year everywhere, and the prohibitive price of Michigan beans is drawing foreign beans to this country and obliterating the European demand, as wheat flour, corn meal and oat meal all show better food value at a much lower price.

California claims the best crop in her history, and that of Michigan will be over par in size and of the finest quality ever known. No jobber or packer or speculator is investing in Michigan beans at the price established by the growers.

Spices.

The market continues fairly active with few changes in prices. The demand we believe will be large over the balance of the year and stocks here continue small. Indications really point to higher values throughout the list.

Pepper.—Prices quoted from abroad are higher than those here. In fact, the goods on sale here at quoted prices is limited. Higher prices for all grades of pepper are probable.

Red Peppers.—Better grades are scarce. There are no special changes in price this week.

Cloves.—Are quotably unchanged. The future, however, is uncertain.

Pimento (Allspice).—In fair demand at generally unchanged prices. The better grades continue scarce.

Mace.—No change during the week and the demand fair.

Nutmegs.—In rather large demand and large sales have been made during the week. The stocks here have been heavily reduced and higher prices are probable.

QUALITY AND SERVICE

Dear Friend:

We want to call your attention to the fact that one year has elapsed since we first started to serve the people of Patterson Heights with groceries, October 8th being our first birthday. We want to assure all our patrons that this year will always be remembered by us as one of great pleasure and are taking this opportunity of thanking you for your patronage.

It has been our ambition to give you the BEST QUALITY of goods your money could buy and to give you BETTER SERVICE than you could secure elsewhere. We will leave it for you to judge whether or not we have been successful.

We wish to make our store your store and want you to feel at liberty at any time to make any criticisms or offer any suggestions you may have in mind. We assure you anything you may suggest will be given careful consideration and as far as possible will be carried out, if we feel that by so doing we could benefit the majority of our customers. We ask you at this time to consider the three questions on the enclosed card and if you will, please give us your opinion in writing so that we may give this matter our careful attention.

We certainly appreciate what our customers have done for us in the past as they have just enabled us to do three times as much business during the past month as we did during October of last year, our first month.

We ask you to kindly mention us to your neighbors and friends and we will endeavor to show them the same courtesy we have shown you.

Yours for Quality and Service,

E. E. Withrow

The above is a photographic facsimile of a letter advertisement issued by E. E. Withrow, grocer, Beaver Falls, Pa. Here is his description of it: "I am inclosing a copy of a recent letter which I mailed to all residents of Patterson Heights, whether customers or not. These letters were put out as first-class mail and cost me about 6 cents each, which included stenographer's charge for addressing the envelopes.

"Patterson's Heights is a residential section, made up of about 250 families, many of whom are prominent business men of the neighboring cities. The hill supports two grocery stores, and many of the downtown merchants make two deliveries a week, which makes competition keen.

"I have been in business a year and this is the second letter I have put out. This is the only form of advertising I have tried, as I felt this plan would be most effective under the conditions. Any criticisms or suggestions will be greatly appreciated."

We believe this is good general publicity—the sort of publicity, in other words, which is calculated to keep a store in the public eye. rather than get direct orders. Every retailer ought to do some of this kind of advertising, but it would be a mistake, we think, to depend upon it altogether.

Cassias.—China grades are fair demand. Saigon and Bat grades are practically unchan Gingers.—African is higher. Other grades firi though quotably unchanged. demand is broader.

Tapiocas.—Very firmly and prices are generally ten upward. Nearby parcels Europe are higher.

Paprika.—In active deman present. The lower grades now very scarce. Indicat point to higher prices before crop goods can arrive.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Cara continues to advance. The ar is getting very scarce. Poppy also moved up. Celery is and slightly lower. Musta firmer and in fair demand. S herbs are generally steady price and active.

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles — hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

Why the United States Government uses Good Luck Jar Rings

The United States Department of Agriculture thinks the "cold pack" way of home canning the best and demonstrates it everywhere.

When you can fruit in the "cold pack" way you put the fruit or vegetables in the jar and cook it under steam pressure. No way of canning strains the jar ring like this. Your ring must be absolutely all right or the percentage of loss will be almost one hundred per cent.

The Government experts who do the "cold pack" demonstrating use Good Luck Jar Rings, and perhaps it's unnecessary to say that they do it not because they like us, but because they know what they're getting.

Good Luck Jar Rings are made of live, new, high-grade rubber that last ten times as long as some jar rings and never goes back on the user. They last perfectly from one season to the next. You can sell other jar rings cheaper, but if you are wise you won't bother with cheap jar rings at all.

Some Rules How to Run a Successful Business.

D'ye know, I'm getting pretty blamed tired of being told by a lot of fatheads how to run my business. Papers, and magazines and correspondence schools—why there's a bunch of 'em big enough, if they all got together, to lick the German army! I'll bet they think they know how to beat the German army, too.

When a fellow that's a better salesman than I am—and there's one or two of 'em—starts in to give me points, I'll sit still and swallow it all night, if he'll stay up that long. But when somebody that never even tried to sell goods butts in and tries to tell me how to sell 'em, he gets mighty little from me except a sour look.

Same way with you fellows. There's a big bunch of people trying to tell you how to run your business. A few of 'em know what they're talking about, but most of 'em are drawing checks on their imaginations.

I've seen some stuff printed along this line that honest made me as sick as a dog. Pure bromide—stuff a boy would know, like "Grocery stores should always be kept clean and free from flies." Sure they ought, but who don't know it? They ought to be kept clean of stray mulies, too, and the fellow that said so wouldn't be much different than the one that talks about keeping the store clean.

I own up I'm a little bit fussed up about this, but I've just read in a trade paper some "rules for the conduct of a successful retail business," that blame near give me a sunstroke. I ain't going to print 'em—it would be a shame to waste good white paper—but take it from me, they were worth just as much as these I've drew up. If there's any fellow that needs a rule to keep his store clean and free from flies, he'll get just as much good out of my rules. Here's my rules:—

1—The best and most advanced retail merchants are gradually dropping the habit of going about the store in their bare feet. John Wanamaker's recent announcement that he would personally cease this practice on Thanksgiving Day has aroused great and favorable attention. Retailers should at least wear socks while waiting on trade, having as few holes in as possible. Shoes are not absolutely obligatory, but if worn, should be mates.

2—Delivery horses should be kept in the stable, and should never be allowed to stand in the store to flirt with women customers.

3—Delivery horses should never wear derby hats, as it makes them conceited. They should stick to the more conventional Quaker bonnet.

4—When a customer enters the store and states what she wishes, the proprietor should never give an imitation of a monkey sewing shirts for shiftless soldiers, but should fill the order as given. This rule is contributed by one of the most successful merchants in the United States, who attributes much of his success to it.

5—If a retail store is conducted after dark it should be lighted by artificial light. Practically all merchants who have attempted to transact business after dark with no light in their stores have abandoned the practice.

6—The personal appearance of a retail grocer is highly important. He should always wear trousers if he has them, and his socks should never be worn anywhere except on his feet. If married to a wife who insists on wearing the trousers, he should borrow them during business hours.

I read these rules over to an old customer of mine, and what he said about 'em made me feel that they might do some good.

"Bill," I said, "some people seem to think I know something about how a business ought to be run, and I thought I'd put some of my ideas on paper. I've got some of 'em here; wa hear 'em?"

Bill said he did, but he li know when a man's tellin truth.

All the same, I read 'em t He didn't move or say a wo the way through—great ence, believe me!—and th said:—

"They're all right, but I t man that's been in busines time at all ought to know of those things without told. For instance, that one lighting a store at night. how—"

I give him one sad look drifted out. Can you be Maybe I'm wrong in thinki stuff you see printed about l run a business ain't nece Maybe it is necessary.

Your Trade

Every grocer is entitled to as much of his community's business as the quality of his goods and service can command. Some get the lion's share—others hang on and just make expenses. Why?

It is largely a question of quality and service. Goods that are known for their high quality command the great bulk of the trade.

N. B. C. advertising has carried the message of the best biscuit baked to nearly everyone, nearly everywhere. A display of the famous In-er-Seal Trade Mark packages is an asset to any grocer. People recognize these superior products as an indication of a quality store and do their regular buying accordingly.

No. 389.—Tying a Valued Employe to You Without Giving Him a Partnership.

In the every day discussion of the legal problems of business. questions growing out of partnership will probably come up oftener than any other question. Therefore the following will strike a responsive chord in many breasts:—

Philadelphia, Pa.

I have a very good man in my employ who has been with me for about 12 years. He is a good all round man, and has done considerable selling, both in and out of the store. He also has a good idea of advertising, and is such an employee as any retail store will not let go if he can be held. The writer is getting along in years and has thought of perpetuating this man in the business, but doesn't know how to do it. Should it be done by giving him a partnership interest? The writer has never had a partner and hesitates to go into that, owing to the danger that a man who was satisfactory as an employee might not make such a good partner. Will you please discuss this if you think it is important enough to find a place in your always interesting column. The idea is to retain the services of the employee referred to on the most effective plan, without any danger to the writer or the business.

Yours,
R. M. Co.

To take a partner or not to take a partner, is almost as much "the question" as the one asked in the famous soliloquy of Hamlet. And if business men would debate it longer and harder there would be fewer unhappy partnerships.

My advice to this correspondent, and to anybody else in the same boat, is not to take an employee in as partner if you can possibly hold him in any other way. Take a partner only as a last resort, when the result sought to be accomplished can be accomplished in no other way.

In practice I have found that the best way, everything considered, to tie a valued employee to a business is by giving him a share in the profits. This is the largest part of what he would get from a partnership anyway, except some authority which he might misuse. If I knew him and his capabilities well, I should make a long time contract with him as an employee, providing in it a regular salary and a percentage of the profits. To protect myself I should also include a provision that the contract was conditional on the continuance of satisfactory service on his part.

Giving an employee a share in the profits of course does not constitute him a partner, particularly when you have made a contract of employment with him which gives him the share in the profits as part of his compensation. Therefore he is as much subject to your orders as he was without the share in the profits, and he cannot bind you any more than any other employee can, unless you wish him to.

Contrast this with his ability to do you harm, if you make a partner of him. The essence of partnership is agency. Each partner is the agent of the others, and can do things which, though hurtful to the firm, will still bind it. When you make an employee your partner, you are to a certain extent at his mercy in the following respects:—

1. He can bind you, and the firm, and with it any other individual members, by any act within the ordinary scope of the partnership business.

2. He may receive payment for a firm debt and give receipts, and the other partners are bound even though he never turns in the money.

3. He may compromise or release a firm claim.

4. He may draw checks against the firm's assets and endorse and cash checks drawn in the firm's favor.

5. He may make contracts; even bad contracts, with reference to the firm's business, which bind the other partners.

6. He may cancel insurance on the firm's property.

7. He may buy goods on the firm's credit, even though he thereby runs the partnership into overwhelming debt.

8. He may engage employees and make contracts with them that bind the firm.

9. He may acknowledge a debt, and thus bind the firm, even though the other partner may wish to repudiate it.

10. He may make promissory notes, even though he abuses this trust for his personal benefit, and the firm is bound. He cannot waive exemption for the firm in a judgment note, however.

11. He may borrow money on the firm credit even to the point of mortgaging the partnership's personal property.

Even in another way the individual partner is liable for the acts of his fellow partner. He is liable for any loss to third persons caused by the fraud or wrongful act of his partner, if that act was in the ordinary course of business, even though he knew nothing about it and gave his partner no express authority to do it. This extends even to the misapplication of another's money by a partner; the firm must make it good if done in the course of ordinary business.

In none of the above instances can the power of a partner be restricted, except by agreeme tween the partners, which worth anything as agains siders must be brought t attention.

I have often thought th could have something lik above printed on a card, an it to every business man w thinking of taking a part would probably cut dow number of new partnersh half. And I certainly wo down the number of laws half, and the number of u business relations by half.

I should not close this also restating what I hav stated before, that every p individual fortune is resp for the firm debts, which that if you took this man partner, and he happened reckless and arbitrary, an bad contracts that bound t he might not personally su cause he might have no p estate. On the other han entire personal fortune m swept away.

I say again that not f thing at all, if it can be a do I advise placing yours position where you will b mercy of another man i vital respects.

Over 2,623 Cases Brought Under Federal Food and Drug and Other Inspection Acts.

$116,430.58 Recovered in Fines and Penalties. 978 Cases Under Food and Drug Act Alone, and 237 Under Meat Inspection Act.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
November 10, 1916.

The following summary, showing the activities of the U. S. Department of Agriculture during the last fiscal year in enforcing the Food and Drugs Act and other regulatory statutes administered by the Department, is taken from the annual report of the solicitor of that Department.

In the enforcement of these various laws the courts were invoked in 2,623 violations, and a total of $116,430.58 was recovered in fines and damages. This is exclusive of condemnations and forfeitures in 553 cases under the Food and Drugs and Insecticide Acts.

Nine hundred and seventy-eight cases under the Food and Drugs Act were brought by the Department of Justice, in 401 of which criminal proceedings and in 577 of which seizures were recommended. The 401 criminal cases embraced 787 alleged violations of the Food and Drugs Act.

Two hundred and thirty-seven cases under the Meat Inspection Law were brought by the Attorney-General. One hundred and eighty-eight resulted in convictions.

Sentence of imprisonment, amounting to thirty days, was imposed in one case; in another, the defendant was committed to jail pending payment of his fine; while in four other cases, consolidated into one, sentence was suspended upon payment of costs by defendant.

Fines aggregating $3,250 were imposed in 133 cases. HOLT.

Paper Products Going Up Also.

Toilet paper and paper towel manufacturers have not advanced their prices to the same extent that other manufacturers of paper have found it necessary to do, but with old stocks of pulp and other raw materials being gradually depleted and new stocks costing 150 per cent. more than a year ago, it is inevitable that toilet paper and paper towels must advance in a like proportion.

Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—I do not want to monopolize your department, but the enclosed circular has proved the best puller yet. In fact we had the biggest Saturday business we have had in ten years and would like to have you comment on it. I have tried to follow the suggestions for improvement you made on the last one I sent you and will appreciate any suggestions or criticisms on this one. I wish to thank you for the interest taken in my adds and to assure you of my appreciation of your department. It certainly has been a big help to me.

Sincerely yours,
E. M. CHAMBON.

Mr. Chambon sends in a well printed little 4-page circular 6 x 9 inches. The paper used was exceptionally fine. In these days of high paper costs, it must have cost him a small fortune. It is even unnecessarily good in my judgment. For ordinary retail advertising, with no half tone cuts in it, it is not necessary to use such fine paper.

The circular sent in makes a feature of Apple Day, which was set to occur October 28th, although nothing is said about it except to offer fancy York Imperial apples at 43 cents a peck, value 60 cents a peck. The idea of Apple Day is of course to get more people to use apples, but it seems to me like a particularly useless thing to cut the price on a thing like apples.

Good live advertising. It looks and sounds as if it was written by somebody on the job who knows the goods that are being offered. I should confidently expect this advertising to get results. I'm not sure that a single issue of a circular like this would get orders, although I should expect it to get some. This kind of advertising finds its greatest strength in continuous appearance. It is not transient advertising in any sense and might be wholly ineffective as transient advertising.

It's a peculiar thing how advertising will create in your mind a picture of the store issuing it. That is one of its objects and in the long run, one of the most useful things it does. The picture of the Chambon store which I get from this circular is of a good-sized, well kept store, well lighted, and well arranged, with up-to-date service and equipment—a clean, busy, well kept store. If after sizing up this advertising I should go in the Chambon store and find it a dark, little, badly kept place, I should be very greatly surprised, and should conclude at once that somebody outside the store was preparing the advertising and was out of its atmos entirely. In that case the should of course be made its advertising. No mer should ever issue advertising ter that is better than his st provided the object of his adver is to bring people to his stor he is doing a mail order bus and nobody ever comes t place, of course it makes n ference.

NOTE.—This department is dev the criticism of advertising matt in, to the devising of new adv ideas for special occasions, upon r and to the suggesting of original tisements when data is supplied communications sent for this ment should be addressed to the of Science of Advertising. Th be taken up in strict rotation.

RED RABBIT:—A new recipe and a good one, a variation of the old style "Welsh Rabbit," and decidedly more appetising. Try it we know its good. Pour the contents of one can of Campbell's Tomato Soup into double boiler, when hot add one pound of cheese cut in dice, cook until cheese is thoroughly melted and mixed with soup. Add red pepper to taste, and one egg slightly beaten. Stir well a few minutes and serve hot on crackers or toast.

SWEET PICKELS:—Extra large, Jumbo Sweets, solid, excellent flavor. In fact the best Sweet Pickels you ever tasted, Worth 20c.
Per dozen.....15c

SOUR KROUT:—.Sure it's good, Lake Side brand, long silver threads, we know it will please you, if you like Krout, no odor from cooking, just heat and serve.
Large cans.....15c

PEANUT BUTTER IN BULK
Made from fresh roasted Virginia Peanuts, to which nothing is added except table salt, fresh and sanitary.
Per pound.....18c

OLIVE SALAD:—Edward's new goods, fine for sandwiches.
Tall jars.....15c

FANCY MESS MACKEREL
Heads and tails off large meaty fish. Better have one for breakfast.
Each 20c

Premier Lobster, per can.....30c
Fresh Crab Meat, per can.....25c

COCO-NUT BUTTERINE
Nut Margarine is as pure as snow. It is richer than cream. Made from the meat of Coconuts, crushed and refined into a cream white butter. It could not be finer, it is just pure Coco-nut butter. Peanut oil, imported from France and Holland is added. These two products are churned with cultured milk, when it leaves the churn it is worked and salted, the same as creamery butter, nothing else added, surely an appetising product. You can not tell it from the best butter. Try it and you will be agreeably surprised.

A Word to Retail Grocers' Associations

Retail Grocers' Associations everywhere would do well to take up the specialty stamp idea and educate their members to always favor specialty orders which bear one or the other of the above stamps.

Not in the interest of any particular manufacturers—most of the leading specialty manufacturers of the country now use the stamp. This is not a campaign in anybody's personal interest; it is a campaign in the interest of a principle.

The principle of efficiency, of having orders for merchandise taken honestly, forwarded honestly and precisely as taken, and filled without interference and delay.

That last paragraph really tells the whole story of the specialty stamp. Retail Grocers' Associations which believe in the above platform, give the cause a friendly hand.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Woe betide the retailer who has to sell everything himself—who handles no nationally advertised products which have practically been sold by the manufacturer.

His days are surely days of all work and no play. We declare without qualification that no grocer who has to sell everything himself to-day can make a living. He can't possibly turn enough goods in the time at his disposal.

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

ESTABLISHED 1885

VOL. LXII. PHILADELPHIA, November 20, 1916. No. 21

If there is a consumer that you could sell goods to and ought to sell goods to, but are now selling no goods to, never cease your efforts, direct or indirect, to sell him in one way or another.

The First Technical School for Grocers in the United States Opens in New York. It is Patterned After the English Institute of Certificated Grocers.

A Seasoned Retailer Tells How the Individual Grocers' Personality Gives Him a Weapon Against Chain Stores.

The Real Truth About a Mail Order Tea Bargain. Some of the Offerings Were Not Fit for Ordinary Consumers at All.

Make Your Customers Happy

by telling them how to be independent of cooks and servants by serving with milk or cream, or other fruits—a whole wheat food ready-cooked and ready-to-serve. So easy to prepare a delicious meal in a jiffy with Shredded Wheat and milk to work on, to play on—for youngsters and grown-ups. You sell the biscuit and the fruit.

The Biscuit is packed in odorless spruce wood cases which may be easily sold for 10 or 15 cents, thereby adding to the grocer's profits.

Don't Sell Unprofitable Wheat Cereals

Every grocer must sell at least one wheat cereal. Some wheat cereals actually cost him money to sell, instead of paying a profit.

Wheatena is the best wheat cereal made—the most carefully made—and has always paid the retailer a good profit. Merchandise which is at the same time good and profitable is the only kind to sell.

Written for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Here is an Infallible Way of Meeting Chain Store and Mail Order Competition

The Individual Retailer Has a Mightier Asset Than Anybody Else in His Personality. How to Cultivate It and What It Will Do When Cultivated.

The mightiest thing in business is the merchant's personality behind the counter. In the retail store it has been noted that the most perfect economy plan falls so far below the owner's presence that there really is no fitting comparison. Where a chain of twenty or more stores are under one ownership and control, the personality at the head of it must necessarily travel down through the force, not having the rhythm of the producers machinery, but through the fallibility of humanity, the greatest kind of leakage must ensue in any system, and this is is especially true in the adjusting of disputes that arise with the trade.

If a merchant's personality is to be used for profit in his own business, the scales must fall from his eyes; he must be able to realize and to recognize his own defects and his competitors' strong points so that he can match brains with them.

The personality—the individuality, if we remember that individuality denotes also worthy characteristics as well as different characteristics, is a selling force comparable only to that of a "good name of man or woman" which is the "immediate jewel of their soul." It is not exactly prestige; it is not a mere reputation for modishness; not simply a synonym for square dealing, or efficient merchandising, or low pricing. It is all of these, or any of these so impressed upon a woman's mind that she is hardly even tempted to shop anywhere else than at ————.

This public knowledge of a store's individuality is oftenest, nowadays, built up by advertising. The service rendered must be impartial and if that is to be accomplished the merchant himself must be impartial at heart, for he has no means of knowing which of his customers will radiate the most influence; all communicate some whether it be good or bad.

Slogans that are not worked are worse than none and we attach but little importance to them as they are of value only in proportion as they are in accord with the value of the store's service, for it is in the service that the individuality of the store centers.

Individuality is that group of impressions inseparably associated with a particular store in the minds of those who shop there. System cannot bring it in its entirety. One shopper's mind may be impressed with one aspect of the store—another with another. One may shop at ————'s because goods are promptly exchanged; another because the clerks are polite; another because one always finds what one wants; another because there is no misrepresentation of values; another because it is such an inviting place to trade; another because the "best people" trade there; and so on. One of these elements or another like them, or a mixture of such elements constitutes the individuality—the something distinct and good which separates one store from another—it's competitor.

Advertising "quality shop" without the quality in goods or service avails nothing. Long prices to offset badly placed credits sustaining serious losses is drawing the merchant into the death grapple with the competitor who is careful about his credits and who can and does often undersell you without laying a proportion upon his whole trade, as is done by the man who tries to "beat them to it."

Self analysis is a splendid thing; it is a great day in any merchant's life when he, by careful study, by observation from without and honesty of purpose from within, is lead to the point where he "finds himself."

If he has been drifting with the current of least resistance in the commercial sea, he will be able to see his danger.

To learn to dissect one's self is the first duty of any business man. He can hardly expect to read others until he knows himself.

He must learn to penetrate the subconscious chambers of his own inner strength, tap the reservoir, unleash its mighty forces that will radiate influences throughout every avenue of his business and social activities. The successful founders of business have been those who have radiated their personality through the structure of the trade they built.

A merchant who lived several blocks from his store cultivated the habit of speaking to every man he met, and it was his privilege to meet several hundred every morning for he resided in an industrial center. He soon began to notice how those men were on the alert for his cheerful "good morning"; it had a reactionary influence upon the man himself, it helped him; "it brightened his corner" and he also found that this little display of his human side increased the cash sales of his store and won for it new credit customers.

Personality is the chief factor in any business. A big business is never built without it, because personal power is the strongest bond between men and a unified organization in a business establishment is chiefly the result of the same power—personality.

This power will cause every employee in such an establishment to give to the business and to his particular part of the business the very best that is in him. And the man who can secure that individual effort, still his impressions, inaugurating general team work, and loyalty from those he employs, is the man who wins.

When we find such generalship there is the consideration due the trade and the point is made and always adhered to, that careful attendance and personal treatment be accorded every visitor to that store no matter what amount of purchase or if no purchase is made at all. There must be the insistence that a customer who spends 10 cents should be given just as close attention and as patient attendance as the tomer who spends $10; for often 10-cent customers of t develop into buyers of to-mo whose every bill may tota more than the $10 purchase present.

One washer woman will s your good qualities over ten the territory that a society w will, for the reason that the mer buys and remembers an latter buys and forgets.

Every individual in or o business is daily contributi the sum total of the world's tress or its happiness. What are you in? No man can fa terly if he will generate the that is in him, keep his pride subjection and add his mi understanding to the sum to the world's knowledge.

ecialty Manufacturers Tell How Retail- ers' Specialty Orders Ought to Be Filled

y the Custom of Jobbers Turning Such Orders Over to Their Salesmen Is Unfair. How the Manufacturers Think the Jobbers Should Act in the Matter.

ıe American Specialty Manu- ırers' Association has issued a tin explaining what it consid- he "perfect" way for wholesale ers to fill specialty orders n from retailers by manufactur- salesmen. Readers hereof v that before the specialty ıp was invented, many jobbers ld turn these orders over to salesmen, who would see the lers who had signed the orders, heir next call. The manufac- rs considered this pernicious, have been working for years to way with it. The bulletin gives ollowing reasons why the prac- referred to was undesirable:—

First. The injustice to the anufacturer of giving the re- iler another opportunity to consider his purchase.

Second. Wholesale grocery lesmen, having so many items sell, are busy men and are ry apt to forget all about ıch specialty orders until too te to be filled.

Third. It gives such sales- en an opportunity to work to e detriment of the filling of ıch orders, leaving the buyer hold the bag and get rid of e purchases made to cover e orders as best he can. verstock and tail ends at in- ntory time follow in the wake such a system.

he American Specialty Manu- urers' Association thinks that ers should treat all such orders ollows:—

First. Treat American Spe- alty Manufacturers' Associa- on members specialty orders the same manner that you eat your own orders.

(a) Immediately make out a parate house order for every ccepted specialty order, amping same "specialty der."

This means that jobbers' salesmen will have nothing to do with the filling of the order, and that specialty orders will not be held up to be added to the next regular order, which often causes delay, misplacing or loss of order.

(b) Register the order.

(c) Send order to the ship- ping department with instruc- tions that if in city to deliver on first delivery in neighbor- hood, irrespective of any regu- lar order—if in country and order is not large enough to ship alone, to ship with next order.

Second. Do not hold up any American Specialty Manufac- turers' Association members' specialty orders for credit rea- sons. If you cannot ship promptly do not accept the order.

Third. If retailer refuses de- livery, notify our member, or write this office, giving all par- ticulars. Jobbers adopting the system outlined will have a more clean stock and less tag ends at inventory time.

Federal Trade Commission May Investigate High Cost of Living.

Increases in the cost of food products are likely to be the sub- ject of an investigation by the Fed- eral Trade Commission. Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the com- mission, said in Chicago during the week that the subject would be con- sidered at a meeting of the com- mission in Washington Friday.

"KUP KWALITY FIRST KONSIDERATION"

Here's the Answer to the Retailer's Coffee Problem

¶ One of the big subjects at the National Coffee Roasters Convention in Atlantic City last week was how shall the retailer get back his coffee business from the peddler and the chain store man.

¶ We have one way:—let him sell a standardized coffee, a blend or a grade which is something more than a mere bulk coffee bought at random, a coffee that stands for something, and a coffee that never varies.

¶ In other words, let him sell Harisco Standardized Coffees, a list of coffees that mean 100 per cent. more than the ordinary run of coffees, and that never vary in quality.

¶ We contend that with a line like Harisco Standardized Coffees any retailer can hold his present trade and have something real to offer new customers. Let him ask himself why he loses coffee customers, if it is not because people were dissatisfied with the coffee they got from him.

WITH THE EDITOR

Another Critic of Our Views on Retail Profits.

On the first page of this paper for November 6th appeared the following:—

Consumers are being educated today, by a variety of conditions, to pay good prices for everything they buy. The retail merchant who doesn't take advantage of that had better drop out—never again will he have such a chance.

Last Sunday the New York "Sun" took this up and almost frothed at the mouth about it. A week or two before that the New York "Tribune" reproduced something else which appeared in this paper on the question of profits, and commented upon it adversely from the consumers' standpoint. I cannot express how deeply I regret the fact that these New York papers are not pleased with this paper's views on the question of retail profits, and I may decide to submit advance proofs of the contents of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" so they can censor whatever they disapprove of.

The burden of the "Sun's" remarks was that the paragraph reproduced above "invites grocers to gouge." This is the characteristic comment of an ignorant man. I suppose the "Sun" feels like most other consumers—that charging any profit is gouging. The "Sun" will be surprised to hear, as it seems to know nothing of the subject now, that not one grocer out of a thousand is getting a fair profit on everything he sells. Some are getting a fair profit on practically nothing which they sell. Others, who are able to charge exorbitant profits on some things to make up for the loss they are compelled to make on other things, are making a fair return on their business considered as a whole. The present advancing markets furnish a splendid opportunity to readjust profits to raise profits on many articles, and when these assume their own burdens, then to reduce the profits on the articles that have been heretofore carrying that burden for them.

Cheek.

I cannot understand some manufacturers' attitude toward trade papers. They refuse to advertise in them for a variety of reasons: because they tried advertising once and got no returns; because if they advertise in one paper they have to go in all, and they aren't ready to go in all; because their "appropriation has been exhausted"; because they aren't in the particular territory; because they are oversold—oh, for a huge variety of reasons, every one of which of course they have a perfect right to have. As a matter of fact, nobody needs any reason or excuse for not advertising. It is his own business entirely.

But why does this particular type of manufacturer, when he has anything in the nature of free advertising which he thinks will exploit him, always so carefully send it to the trade paper and "trust that you may find it sufficiently interesting to reproduce"? If paid advertising will do him no good, how will free advertising? There is a long list of manufacturers that do this; personally, I think it pretty cheeky.

A Lie Exposed.

The following letter, just received from a subscriber, should have a public answer:—

Purchase Line, Pa.,

Grocery World Publication Co.

Gentlemen:—I have sent in a subscription to your paper. I got it from your agent and he explained to me that any advertisement I saw in the paper that if I mentioned your paper that they would sell direct to me. Now I wrote to the Shredded Wheat Co., which is one of your advertisers, but they said they sold to jobbers only. I have only a general store, but if you can explain to me how I can as a retail merchant buy from the manufacturers direct through being a subscriber to your paper I will be glad if you will do so.

Very respectfully,
M. L. Houk.

The solicitor who told Mr. Houk such a thing as this is a liar and a faker and if he will tell us who he is we will discharge him on spot. There is nothing in his ment at all. Subscribers to paper can not buy direct fro manufacturer merely becaus are subscribers to this paper say that they saw the advertis here. I am surprised that Houk would ever believe su tale.

Retailers can buy of some m facturers direct, no matter quantity they buy, but from manufacturers they can buy o case they buy the quantity. I buy the quantity they don't ha be subscribers of anything.

The Moving Ordinance Gone.

A St. Louis, Mo., court ha made a decision which I have expecting s court to mak some time. decision is what is known as the moving nance is unconstitutional.

The moving ordinance, as usually called, has been pass a number of towns and citie compels all owners of moving to learn and register the de tion of persons they move fro locality to another. This so th tailers who are defrauded b sudden removal of a custome go after him. The idea of th dinance was good enough. scheme of a dead beat debtor t fraud his creditor ought to be trated, but from a legal stand such legislation is fantastic an possible. No city has any rig pass such a law, and the St. court has now said so.

When all's said and done, th tailer who sells for cash mus perience a certain comfort in ability to view all such camp with indifference.

Old Subscribers, Please Answer

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has on its subscription books subscribers who have been such for twenty or twenty-five years, in some cases even longer. Unfortunately, prior to a few years ago the subscription records were not kept in such a way as to show when each subscriber first came upon the lists. Therefore we cannot go to the lists and pick these old subscribers names out ourselves.

We ask every subscriber who has been a subscriber of this journal more than fifteen years continuously, to be good enough to send their names to this office.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Mr. Smedley addressed the Frankford Retail Grocers' Association on Monday, November 6th. There was a large attendance and it was an interesting meeting. There was good music and refreshments. This organization is one of the best in the country and has a large membership and is ably officered. The secretary-manager, J. A. Edgar, who has grown up with the organization, is a real leader and under his splendid guidance much good has resulted.

The association has recently added two stories to its already large warehouse and the enlarged plant is a monument to the co-operative spirit of the membership and the farsightedness of its leaders.

You simply can't realize the value of an International Motor Truck as a business builder until you use one, or—until your competitor gets one. You will notice, though, that no man who once uses an International Motor Truck ever goes back to horses.

Why is that? There are many reasons. The truck costs less money than the horse outfits whose work it does. The upkeep is less. It takes less work and less time than horses to keep in condition. It's a money saver, a time saver, and a steady worker, but—more than all these put together—the International Motor Truck is a business builder.

This Country's First Technical School for Grocers Opens in New York

Weekly Lectures by Leaders of the Trade. Patterned After English Institute of Certificated Grocers, and in Charge of a Graduate of That Institution. Course Not as Comprehensive as the English Course, But a Good Beginning.

The first technical school for grocers and their clerks to start in this country is about to open in New York City, as an adjunct to the 23d Street Y. M. C. A. It is in charge of a graduate of the English Institute of Certificated Grocers, to whose plan of educating grocers this paper has devoted a great deal of attention for several years. Leading men of the trade will deliver lectures on the various phases of the grocery business, and at the close, if the student passes the examination, a certificate known as the Chelsea School Certificate will be given. The course will not be anywhere near as elaborate or comprehensive as the English Institute course, but it is a good beginning. Lectures are given weekly on Wednesday evenings, and the school is known as the Chelsea School.

For the first season the course will be confined almost entirely to grocery products, and the following is a complete summary of the course:—

Enormous Shortage in Freight Cars Reported. Plan to Increase Popularity of Porto Rico Coffee.

New York, November 17, 1916.

The trade here are much interested in the announcement made here during the week that the net shortage of freight cars on the American railroads was 108,010. Inasmuch as this market is feeling the effects of the shortage in freight cars probably more than any other market in the United States, this is receiving the serious attention of the trade. It shows the greatest shortage in freight equipment than has occurred in the history of transportation with the exception of ruary 6, 1907. The shortag freight cars has almost doubl one month, while on August there was a surplus of 9,762 cars.

The Shuman Pricing System Is Genteel and Attractive

HOME-MADE price tags are very apt to give a store a Cheap-John appearance.

Shuman Shelf Tags, printed in deep navy-blue ink, really "dress-up" a store.

And They Do Sell the Goods

The system consists of galvanized steel clamps that fit firmly onto the shelves, and gummed paper labels that stick on the face of the clamps.

Labels are so arranged that you can make any combination of figures up to 99c.

Costs Only $3.25 Delivered

Order through your jobber or send us check or money order for $3.25 and a set will go to you by parcel post prepaid.

tional Coffee Roasters' Convention Discusses Plan for Advertising Coffee Into Larger Consumption ious Speakers and Committees Handle the Subject. California Delegate Says Too Much of the Matter Issued About Coffee is Defensive.

ne National Coffee Roasters' ociation, at their convention in ntic City during the week, ned to a denunciation by Dr. erg, Chief of the Federal Bu- of Chemistry, of the glazing of ee for the purpose of improving ppearance.

harles H. Bain, of San Fran-, delivered a protest in the e of the California Coffee sters' Association against the ensive tone" of much of the rtising issued by the National ociation. The national adver- g campaign to consumers at- ted a great deal of attention. ious addresses were made on it, cipally by F. J. Ach, of Day- Ohio, and Ross W. Weir, of v York.

Mr. Alfred H. Beckmann, secretary of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, made an address in the absence of the president, a part of which was as follows:—

> It may conservatively be stated that the business of at least 75 per cent. of the smaller concerns of the country has been conducted without adequate method or system or scientific accounting. When the business has prospered the profits have been paid out in salaries and the distributions to the partners and stockholders and the managing heads have gained credit as men of business or financial ability, but, when upon occasion it is found there are scarcely any profits or that the profits have been greatly reduced, the cause has been attributed to everything else under the sun except defective means of keeping track of the cost and profit on individual items or in different departments of the business.
> As a rule these smaller concerns that have conducted the bulk of our commerce have each known, of course, how much their business as a whole made from year to year or how much it lost. In a vast majority of cases, however, they have not had accurate knowledge of the details—whether a particular department or salesman or officer, or certain line of goods was in itself profitable, or had been carried along by large profits of other departments or from the sale of other goods. Each branch and item should pay its own way from month to month and not lean upon the prosperity of some other branch or item. These and other questions having to do with the very vitals of the business have too often been matters of guesswork. In consequence many a business has failed to prosper merely because its managers had not so organized and equipped it that they were able to analyze and to know from month to month and from year to year their true cost and expenses in relation to their receipts.

The following is a part of the report presented by the Pure Food Committee of the association:—

> The only item of importance that the chairman has to report is in connection with the use of other Dutch East Indian coffees in place of Java, in Java and Mocha blends. Certain members of the association asked for information on this point inasmuch as it was impossible to get genuine Java types, and inquired as to whether under the circumstances Sumatra growths might be substituted under a Java and Mocha label with some qualifying clause in connection therewith. The chairman promptly replied to such inquiries stating that in his opinion a label of this description would be considered incorrect, and that unless coffees from the island of Java could be secured it was his opinion that the labels would have to be temporarily suspended.
> It has seemed to the chairman of your committee that inasmuch as the Department of Agriculture is watching coffee imports very carefully for low grades and is correcting errors in connection with interstate shipments as rapidly as they are discovered, there was, consequently very little for the committee to undertake.

There is now very little cause for criticism in connection with coffees in place of Java, in members of the National Coffee Roasters' Association. The chief difficulty is to be found in connection with intrastate shipments on the part of concerns that are not affiliated with our association and that cover a limited territory in which they are centrally located. There are numerous instances where concerns of this description are misrepresenting products, particularly in connection with bulk coffees.

The Federal law has no jurisdiction over such cases and where local authorities are indifferent it is almost impossible to prevent such misrepresentation.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, it being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

The Mental Picture Was Accurate.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have read with much interest your criticism of the advertisement of E. M. Chambon, of McDonald, Pa., in your issue of November 13th. In your article you say "It's a peculiar thing how advertising will create in your mind a picture of the store issuing it," and the picture you get of the Chambon store is of a "good sized, well kept, well lighted, well arranged store, with up-to-date service and equipment."

I take this opportunity to say that your idea of Mr. Chambon's store is absolutely correct. It is one of the up-to-date stores of Washington County. Mr. Chambon is a merchant plus, and his clerks have all caught the spirit of co-operation to such an extent that they work as one family. I have been in Mr. Chambon's store many times and know whereof I speak.

Yours very truly,
WILLIAM SMEDLEY.

As to a Collection Agency.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you, through your "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," give me the name and address of a collecting agency in Akron, Ohio, and if they could collect a debt contracted in this city, the party having moved to Akron, or a better way to collect the debt, $10.50, for groceries, etc.?

Thanking you in advance for this advice, I beg to remain,

Yours truly,
J. PILATO.

We never recommend any collection agency, because we don't know any that we consider worthy of it. So far as we know, there are no collection agencies in Akron, Ohio, anyway. It might be a good idea to write the Akron (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association, or to place the claim in the hands of an Akron lawyer.

r Sir:—We are very much l of a man competent to man- ir grocery department. The , who has had charge of it ally, finds too many other to do and, knowing the game ghly, looks for a man with f life, chuck full of enthusi- id ability.

competing with chain stores d it necessary to have live about us. We prefer a man ween 25 and 35. We want o be thoroughly capable and s the right man we can assure him of a salary from $25 to $35 a week.

In asking you for such a man we feel justified in two ways, first, we know you would not suggest any one incapable; secondly, we know that Philadelphia is riddled with chain stores and a person from there should know how to fight them best. We do a large grocery business with all the expensive strings such as deliveries, stamps, telephones attached. The chain store has hurt us, we admit, but we feel that by excellent service, in and out of the store, clever advertising and courtesy, we can overcome their rather unusual big boom.

Yours very turly,
J. H. AUSLANDER.

The Grocery Markets

Coffee.

The coffee market is unchanged for the week, but perhaps with a shade easier tone. Large supply of available coffee is responsible. The demand also is quite dull. Milds are quiet and easy. Java and Mocha unchanged.

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, except an advance of 1½ cents per pound in Indian Ceylons. The main reason appears to be the lack of transportation facilities from the primary markets. This advance has affected the market in this country and some sales have been made at the higher price. Other lines of tea show no change, but everything is steady to firm. Moderate demand.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no change for the week, either as to raw or refined. Here and there one hears of sales of raws at a price somewhat different from the market, but generally speaking the situation is unchanged. Refined sugar shows no change from a week ago, and the demand is quite light. There is no relief in sight as to present prices.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose, after declining 10 points last week, advanced 20 points during the week just closed. The cause was the advance in the corn market. The whole glucose situation is very sensitive. Compound syrup is somewhat uncertain, but shows no material change for the week. Sugar syrup and molasses all unchanged and in moderate demand.

Fish.

The situation in mackerel shows no change for the week. This includes shores, Irish and 1915 Norways. Considerable complaint is being heard of the Irish mackerel being now offered for sale. Demand for mackerel, considering the price, is good. Cod, hake and haddock are all very firm and in fair demand. Salmon shows no change for the week, except a further advance in horseshoe salmon. The situation is very high on account of scarcity. Demand fair. Domestic sardines are very firm and scarce, prices steadily pushing upward. Imported sardines show no change and a fair demand. Supplies of Norwegian sardines appear to be going forward with fair regularity under the circumstances.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show no change from a week ago. The situation is very firm and high prices are maintained. Demand is very poor indeed, being confined to actual wants. Corn is tending upward; demand light on account of the price. Peas are also looking higher and it seems to be impossible to buy anything at a low price. Apples are high and the price looks like an advance. California canned goods are closely cleaned up on the coast, speaking particularly of peaches, but prices show no change for the week. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and very scarce and high. Some packers are asking $1.40 for spinach against a normal price of 90 cents.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show a further advance and the basis price is now 6½ to 6¾. This is about 2 cents higher than the price ruling a few months ago. The demand is very light. Buyers are working on what they have rather than buy any more. Peaches and apricots are about where they were a week ago. Demand moderate. Prices practically unchanged. New prices were made on seeded raisins at about 1 cent more than the original opening price. Situation is very firm. Currants have not advanced any further for the week, the high price being maintained.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans have taken another advance and are now quoted at $7.15 a bushel. Marrows are $7.50. Both of these prices being in a large way. The situation is very critical indeed. California limas have advanced another notch in sympathy with other beans. Green and Scotch peas are steadily forging upward, and the quotation on green dried peas is around $5 a bushel. Yellow splits are also very much higher.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm and shows an advance of 1½ cents per pound for the week, due to the falling off in the receipts and the heavy export demand and good home consumption. Storage butter is moving lively and is bringing ½ to 1 cent within the price of fresh. Higher prices on butter are looked for until the end of the year at least.

Eggs.

The market for fresh eggs is very firm at an advance of 1 cent and higher prices are looked for until the end of the year; in fact, there are some predictions that during January fresh eggs will go to $1 per dozen. Storage eggs are very firm at an advance of 1 cent. Withdrawals are very heavy. Consumption of eggs is good and there is undoubtedly a shortage as compared with last year.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm at an advance of 1½ to 1¾ cents. This is due to the sharp advance of cheese in country markets, these showing an advance of 1½ to 2½ cents higher. The receipts of cheese are light, while the export and home consumption are heavy. Warehouse holdings are much less everywhere and a gradual rise is looked for from now on until the end of the year.

Provisions.

The market on smoked meats is very firm but unchanged in price. The receipts are larger than last week, but the heavy consump is preventing a decline. Pure is firmer at an advance of ¼ per pound. The export is he Compound lard is also firm a advance of ¼ cent due to the den rise in the price of cotton oil. Barreled pork is firm and changed with a fair dem Canned meats are very firm higher, especially ox tongues. I beef is firm without change.

t this juncture it is of interest calculate just how much more at the United States and Can- can spare without encroaching n the supply necessary for our e needs. In former letters we e shown that after making due wance for curtailment of con- ption, by reason of the high e, the United States can spare million bushels of wheat for ort and Canada 100 million hels, which makes a total of 240 ion bushels from North Amer- This quantity of course in- les the surplus carried over n the 1915 crops. We now find that of this 240 million bushels we have exported to November 1st, 126 millions, and that if our exports continue at the rate of 6 million bushels per week we will have a sufficient surplus for 19 weeks or until about April 1st.

Argentina this week shipped 1,072,000 bushels as against 1,240,000 last week and 1,136,000 two weeks ago. Shipments from India are increasing this week, being 1,112,000, as against 888,000 last week and 664,000 two weeks ago.

Holland shows her uneasiness over the food situation by commandeering this week the entire wheat harvest, fixing the price at the equivalent of $1.71 per bushel of 60 pounds.

As yet America is not in immediate danger of over-exporting, but all indications point to a great scarcity here until the new crops are available, and there is no telling to what altitude prices may be forced.

Imported Fish Specialties.

We may easily start and finish our market report with the phrase, everything is as firm as can be—most of the goods that we handle are higher, and none lower. Heaven only knows whether and when these advances will stop. We certainly do not know. There has been a very good demand for all kinds of herrings during the last week. The market is exceedingly strong, and fine fish of all kinds are in excellent demand at full asking prices. The only weak spot in the situation is the Holland herrings, and they are, in our opinion, low enough, so we may not look for a lower market in future; on the contrary, we may see some higher prices. Whatever is in the market of real fine Scotch herrings is selling readily at full asking prices, and only poor and undesirable stuff is lagging behind. Iceland herrings are as strong as ever, and prices are likely to show an advance very shortly.

Imported sardines of all kinds are selling very freely. Prices are not only very firm, but in many cases higher, and packers abroad are asking more money for their goods, justifying further advances by reason of the advancing prices for tinplate and other materials and the shortage of labor.

Tea.

The United States to-day is in a position unparalleled in her history; her foreign trade for the year 1916 will be eight billions of dollars, or about one-fifth of the entire international trade of the world.

Our transportation facilities are totally inadequate to handle this enormous business, and we are facing the greatest car shortage ever known.

Up till November 1, 1916, there have been 1,820 ships sunk, aggregating a gross tonnage of 3,328,000 tons, and there were more ships sunk in October than any month preceding.

Cables from Calcutta report market advancing and crops up to October 31st report a shortage of 6,000,000 pounds, and it is anticipated the season's decrease will be 20,000,000 pounds.

Cable from Colombo reports market advanced 3 cents, due to Russian buying.

London cables market advanced ½d and market nervous, due to loss of so many vessels.

Green Teas.—Market about closed, with only one-third export of Moyune tea in comparison with 1915, which was small and only 9¼ million pounds of Pingsueys, or an entire shortage in green tea of over 2,000,000 pounds for the season.

Black Teas.—Settlements of Formosa Oolongs up to November 8th. 12,500 half chests less than a year ago.

Foochow Oolongs.—Entire crop this season 15,000 half chests, or about one-third of normal, and tea men are holding for extreme prices.

Congous.—Cable October 12th showed export from Shanghai 600,000 pounds less than 1915, and 1,600,000 pounds less than 1914.

Japan Teas.—Export much less than last season; complete figures not in yet, but a good demand is on for these teas to take the place of greens, for it looks as if there would soon be no greens under 20 cents, and Japans offer values 5 cents a pound better by comparison and blenders, generally, will secure the best values, which will be Japan teas, and others will mix them with greens and do the best they can till another season's supply is grown.

Stock of tea in warehouses in New York, as of November 6th, shows 25,000 half chests less than same date a year ago, and report of export China and Japan teas from best authorities statistically show shipments, season 1914-15 at 79,949,226 pounds; estimated shipments, 1915-16 at 73,000,000 pounds, leaving 6,949,226 pounds, or approximately a shortage of 7,000,000 pounds of China and Japan teas.

And when you remember that at the end of last season there was practically no stock in first hands, and the smallest stock in possibly fifty years, or since a record has been kept, it seems clear to us that there is but one thing for the jobber and retailer to do, and that is to protect their future business by buying tea at once while they can get it, and at a reasonable basis.

The banks to-day are full of money; any merchant can borrow freely on a low basis, and to carry tea for six months would not cost him over half a cent a pound, while if he waits till stocks are depleted it may cost him 10 cents a pound.

And in regard to the matter of shipping, there will undoubtedly be long delays and embargoes, and the merchant that has the stock in his store to do business with is the one that will get the business; the same applies with equal force to his customers, and with the prosperity we have to-day every retailer can well afford to carry a few extra packages, and many of them will do so.

Spices.

The market continues active. Prices are generally steady. Many articles in the list we believe will go higher. Indications point to an advance in several articles.

Pepper has been marked up about ½ cent during the week. Foreign markets are higher than prices prevailing here. The supply in our country is short and a slow but steady advance is very probable.

Red peppers in fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Cloves moderately active, though without any price change during the week.

Pimento (Allspice) rather quiet and unchanged. The article is firm.

Mace in fair demand and likely to be more active. Prices unchanged.

Nutmegs are higher and in active demand. The spot supply has been reduced greatly in all sizes and grades.

Cassias.—Saigon quiet and unchanged. Batavia and China in fair demand at steady prices.

Paprika.—The steady demand has practically cleaned up all the low priced lots. Better grades are firmer. Prices are unquestionally higher, with upward tendency.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Frank A. Smith & Co., the well known brokers of the Lafayette Building, have added another high grade account to their list—the Carnation Milk Products Co.

Scotland Now Feels High Food Prices

According to the estimates of the Board of Trade "Labour Gazette" the increase in food prices in Scotland since the outbreak of war up to September 30th last was put at 68 per cent., which is reduced to 62 per cent. if the increases in the duties on tea and sugar are deducted. Since these estimates were compiled prices of most foodstuffs have continued more than firm, and in some cases, notably potatoes and milk, there have been further advances. There has been a further rise in potato prices and it is practically certain that Scotland, instead of being an exporter of potatoes this year, will be obliged to import from both England and Ireland. Imports, in fact, have already arrived on the Glasgow market. The upward tendency on the markets applies to all the common classes of provisions—hog products, eggs, butter, cheese, fish, etc. The advance in the price of eggs is much more than seasonal.

Specialty Manufacturers, Meeting in Pittsburgh, Favor Sanitation Amendment to Federal Food and Drug Act.

The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association held its convention during the week at Pittsburgh, the convention being opened by President Carl A. Lutz. Usual reports were given.

The Legislative Committee offered a report favoring an amendment of the Federal Food and Drugs Act compelling all persons engaged in the manufacture of foods to maintain absolutely sanitary conditions at their places of business.

Another interesting address was by F. W. Fiske, Educational Director of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, who said that he had plans in view to raise the entire status of the retail grocer, making of him a sort of professional man.

Let the Quaker Help You

Every product that bears the Quaker name and trade-mark gains prestige from our advertising.

Please do not overlook that. People rarely buy strange brands when they see one that's familiar.

If the Quaker Oats Company has pleased them in one thing they will trust us to please them in others.

All of them respect the Quaker trademark.

On a cereal package it signifies purity. It stands for exceptional quality.

It denotes high standards. It dominates the cereal field all the world over.

Like the signature on a good check, it is a mark of identification.

Don't forget the value of the Quaker label. Make it help you sell goods.

Which is Better, Political Fusses or Customers?

Well, how did the election suit you?

Seems to me this was the fairest election I ever saw. The Hughes people got suited on Wednesday morning, and the Wilson people got suited on Thursday morning. Ain't that fair enough?

I'll be blamed if I ever saw anything that can throw a fellow off his base like politics. Get a man talking politics—get him real worked up, I mean—and by gee, there ain't any end to what he'll say and do. He'll forget his business and anything else.

I was in a customer's store last Friday, after everybody knew that Wilson had got in again. A man came in that ran a little hotel in the town to buy some stuff. He knew the boss like a brother and the two of 'em got on politics right away. The boss was a wild Hughes man and the hotel man was for Wilson. Each of 'em had a hunch that their business was going up in the air the minute the other man's candidate got in. Naturally the hotel man was tickled to death at the way the thing had come out, and he opened up the minute he saw the boss.

"Ha! Ha! Ha! What d'ye think of your man Hughes now?" he yelled out, clear across the store.

"That's all right about Hughes," said the boss. Some sharp come back, eh what?

"Ha! Ha! Ha! some candidate, Hughes was! Ha! Ha! Ha! Why he was dead from the minute he opened his mouth," said the hotel man.

By this time a blind man could see the boss's insides churning. He was sore, like all the other Hughes men, and nobody ought to have put salt in the cuts, but still, here was a good customer, and I say it was up to the boss to pass it off somehow. Ain't that right? Instead of that what did he do?

"Why Wilson ain't a man at all!" he said. "He's a poor shrimp, that's what he is! He wouldn't have been elected at all if every blamed coward in the country hadn't voted for him!"

The hotel man was there with both little feet.

"You're a liar!" he said. "I voted for Wilson and if you call me a coward I'll knock your block off!"

There was still a chance to pass it off, even then, but the boss was ready to let everything go, seemed to me.

"I say anybody that voted for Wilson is a coward," he said, "and that's the only way he got in!""

That didn't seem like much of a political argument to me, but it was just about like what any real mad man gets off.

"Well you can go to ———!" said the hotel man, and he went out, with his order in his hand. Now remember that they had this friendly little talk right out in the store in front of three or four people, both of 'em talking so loud you could hear 'em half a square off. As a matter of fact, a couple of boys going by stopped and glued their mugs against the window to see what the fight was about inside. I don't know whether there was any more Wilson people in the store or not. Neither did the boss. There might have been for all he knew. They were all women, but they've got husbands or sons, or brothers, or something.

Wonder what the husbands or sons or brothers, or something, will do when the women go home and tell 'em that the boss called 'em all cowards.

Why I can see that store losing three or four bang-up customers, just by that. Of course it's lost the hotel man now, and I suppose he was a pretty good buyer.

When the boss came back to fix up his business with me I was hoping he would open up so I could let out some things I was thinking, but he didn't. Guess he knew he was in wrong. He was sore and grouchy and hardly said a word. I know what I'd do if I was him. I'd go straight down to the hotel and I'd hunt up that fool that started the muss—he was a fool, take it from me—and I'd say, "See here, Bill, or Ben, or Charlie, I was a blamed jackass a while ago, for what I said. I hadn't any right to say anything like that, and I didn't mean it. I apologize, old man, and want you to forget it. I don't want you to think that I'm saying this just to get your trade back. It don't make any difference about that at all—you can trade where you please and there won't be a bit of hard feeling on my part if you trade somewhere else. I apologize anyway. I was in wrong in the whole thing."

Unless the hotel man's a mule the thing would be fixed up right there. Then I'd go to every one of the women that heard me call their men folks, maybe, cowards, and say the same thing.

And then I'd go down to Doc Jones, the druggist, and buy a little bottle of chloroform, and I'd carry that around with me from that time on. And the next time anybody tried to rope me in on a political argument, I'd reach in my pocket, get it out and chloroform myself till he'd gone.

ıe Beginning of the Mammoth Heinz Business and What It Stands for To-day

'he great business which, from end of the country to the other, epitomized by the single word einz," had its beginning, not so ıy years ago, in an idea—or ıer an ideal. Then far more ı now, those articles of food ch may be termed luxuries were special objects of family pride. recipes were handed down as cious heirlooms from generation generation. The "knack" of this ron or that white-haired veteran he kitchen was lauded by every tive, and stoutly defended as erior to that of all who might ture to question its title to first ition on the neighborhood roll ıonor.

'he Heinz idea packed and sealed first bottle that bore the name, the broad principles and unique hods—the spirit that now ani- es and pervades every depart- ıt of this great business, have ı largely a matter of growth. character and quality of the l were understood, but the ıre and extent of the vast har- it was to bring forth, no man ld foresee.

'he underlying purpose was ı, as it is now, to give the pub- he choicest products of the soil, prepared and packed as to offer, reasonable price, the highest inable degree of quality, pur- and cleanliness.

rom this initial root, there have ıng, naturally and logically, e far-reaching branches:

'o raise on Heinz farms and ns under Heinz supervision, ything which is packed under Heinz name.

'o raise all such products on ns located where soil and ate combine to produce the icest and finest fruits and vege- es for the particular purpose in- led.

'o make, in so far as possible, ything used in preparing and keting Heinz products, includ- materials, cans, bottles, labels boxes.

'o demand in all things pur- sed the best on the market.

'o discard everything in which most rigid inspection detects the htest flaw.

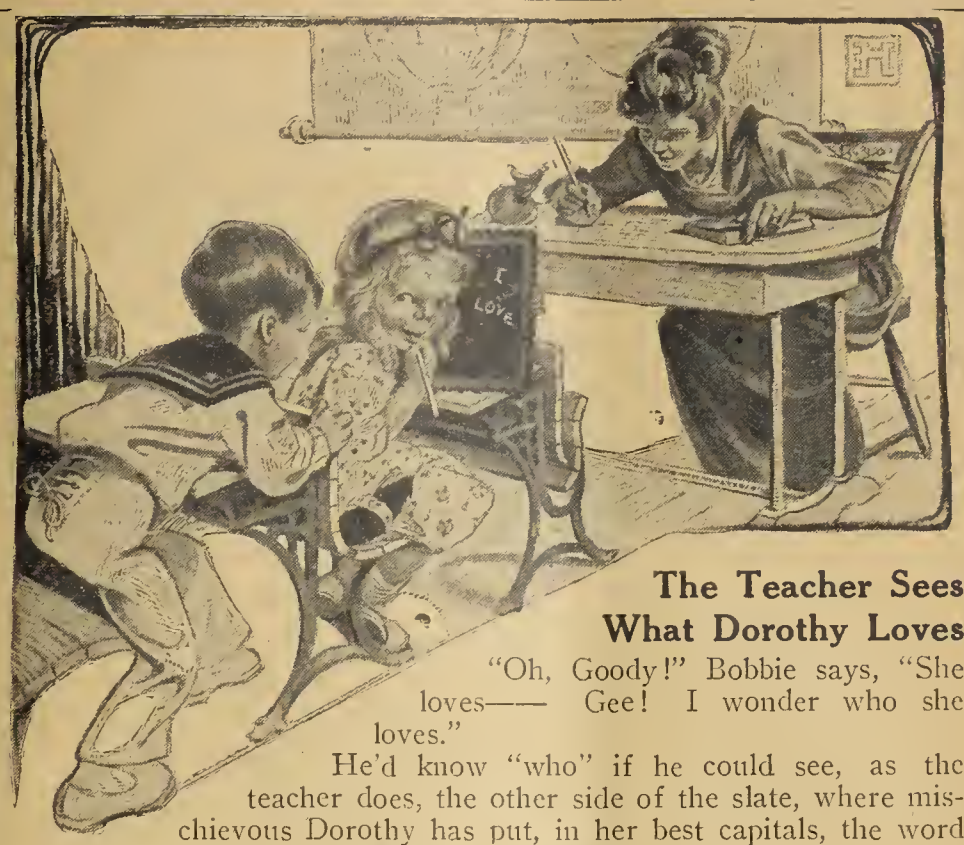
'o provide every known facility equipment which can raise or ntain quality standards, so sed and installed as to insure most perfect results.

'o secure, for every department detail of the work, the most able and efficient men and nen.

'o insure, so far as is possible, comfort, welfare and happiness all employees.

To consider at all times every thought and suggestion looking to the improvement of Heinz products, and their adaptability to the requirements of the public.

To subordinate the question of profit, considering it only in the light of safe business procedure, the solidarity of the business and the best interests of the employees.



And this platform if it may so be called, having in view only those principles and policies which deserve success, has enlisted the loyal and unswerving support of the American people, and has therefore won a material success of a most conspicuous nature.

In a little garden in Sharpsburg, Pa., the house of Heinz saw its modest beginning in the year 1869. There the present head of the business devoted a small plot of land to raising horseradish, and found three small rooms in a nearby house ample space in which to put it up for the limited market to which he could introduce it.

That was forty-five years ago, and, reckoning the figures which mark the lives of great industries, a period of forty-five years is not long. Many a man is now alive who had reached the age of full manhood when the house of Heinz was but a tiny and uncertain shoot —yet now it is like the giant oak whose roots go deep and whose branches spread far.

To those whom interest or curiosity leads to the present home of "the 57" the most impressive feature of the entire business is the fact that all its operations and processes are carried forward under constant public scrutiny. The buildings are open to the people on all working days, and at all hours. More than 50,000 visitors annually come from all quarters of the globe. They come by special invitation—an invitation which is extended to every American, and every tourist from foreign lands—for those who come to see go to their homes with a comprehension of the methods employed and results obtained which word and picture can never convey.

Grouped about a spacious open court, the great buildings containing the kitchens invite the life-giving rays of the sun from dawn to nightfall, and throw open arms to the four winds of heaven. Every pure and refreshing breeze, no matter from what quarter it may spring, finds ready access. Pure air and the full light of the sun penetrate to every point where the workers ply their tasks—the fresh sweetness of the "great outdoors" everywhere meets and greets the spotless cleanliness within.

No. 390.—A Cancelled Contract With Two Slants.

Here is a case which gives a little different slant on the familiar case of the merchant who signs an order for goods without reading it, and afterwards finds that it calls for more goods than he thought he was ordering. The following letter comes to me from a Pennsylvania dealer, evidently a newcomer in the retail field:—

> A salesman for a certain wholesale company called on me early last December and wanted to sell me an order. I had only started in business at the time and was rather green in regard to buying. The goods he was selling was a side line to the grocery business, which I am in, but I told him I would take a small order. So he made me up an order and handed it to me to sign, which I did without looking it over. But that night I looked the duplicate order over and found that it was much larger than I could use and also much larger than I could pay for as I had a very small business and no capital back of me.
> So the following day I wrote the company asking them to cancel the order. They wrote me back stating that they could not cancel the order for the reason that they had already paid the salesman his commission on same. I then wrote them again, saying that if they would cut the order down to about $10 worth of goods I would take it, and if not I could not accept it.
> The next I heard from them was a bill for the goods to the amount of $30, stating that they were then shipping the goods.
> When the goods arrived at the freight station I had the freight agent return them to the company, and I also wrote the company, stating that I had returned the goods.
> Some time later I received a letter from a collection agency, asking for payment, which I ignored, and still later I received two more letters from two different attorneys asking for payment.
> About two weeks ago the company sued me for the bill. The railroad company tells me that the goods were delivered.
> Now I cannot afford to pay for that amount of goods that would be in my store for years before sold.
> Please let me know what can be done.
> I have not the goods at present nor never did have them in my possession.

This correspondent doesn't say explicitly whether the salesman tricked him, as he sees it, into signing a larger order than he thought. If, for instance, it was understood that the order that was to be given was for $10, and the salesman made it out for $30, then one situation would arise.

If on the other hand the order as the salesman made it up was exactly what the correspondent intended it to be, but sometime afterward he got to thinking it over and decided he had overbought, then another and totally different situation would arise.

As both situations are interesting, consider the first one first. As I have pointed out before, there is an amazing amount of carelessness exhibited by business men of all grades in the matter of signing orders and contracts. Time and time again a paper which a buyer or a seller or a party to some contract signs, does not express what he wants it to. Occasionally this is due to fraud, but more often it is because it is not well drawn. But nevertheless, if the party who is deceived had a complete opportunity to read it over before he signed it, and neglected that opportunity, and by reason of such neglect was let in for something, he cannot complain, but must take his medicine. The law has very little time for the business man who signs a paper without reading it, and finds himself deceived in consequence.

There is really only one exception to this rule. If a salesman obtaining an order, or the other party to a contract, pads the order or alters the contract, and then by some subterfuge prevents the deceived party from reading it, the latter can escape on the ground of fraud. But there is no fraud in the eyes of the law when a salesman deliberately pads an order and openly hands it to the buyer to sign, believing that he will carelessly neglect to read it. That is a plain case of negligence on the part of the victim and what he got was coming to him.

So much for the first condition. Let me briefly discuss the second.

No buyer can deliberately and in full knowledge sign an order for merchandise, the order being upon some house that had never sold him goods before, and then back out of it afterwards merely because he changed his mind. An order is a contract which binds both parties unless one party (the seller) has by a long course of dealing, led the buyer to believe that he could cancel an order any time he liked.

In the case submitted to me there can hardly be but one ending to the suit. The minute this correspondent admits that he signed the order (if he was not tricked into doing it), judgment will be given against him for the claim itself, plus certain costs, to which must be added his attorney's fee.

This correspondent admits that he is green about buying. I will tell him how he can avoid such difficulties in the future, and this can also be read with profit by a great many buyers who are not green:—

1—Never order more goods than you know, after full consideration, that you want, for your signed order is a binding contract, and you may not be able to escape from it.

2—Never sign any paper, or contract or what not, without reading it slowly and caref twice and asking for an explana if any part of it needs explanat And if something is lacking wh you think should be in, never the other man's word that: "th all right; we understand each o on that." Insist that it go in paper and don't sign it til does.

e Real Truth of a Mail Or- der Tea Bargain at Sixty Cents Per Pound.

ɔert Examines and Prices Some of ıe Tempting Tea Grades Offered y Mail. Some of the Grades Not it for Ordinary Consumer at All.

Touching the honesty of the ims made by mail-order houses the goods they offer "at whole- e prices" to consumers, we have ːn furnished with a comparison ween certain advertising of tea one of the large mail-order ıses, and an expert appraisement this very tea, some of which was ıt for.

Following is the claim and the ıth:—

TO SOAP CLUBS.

Per 1-pound can 60c. Teas, per ½-pound can, 35c.

These teas are uniformly of superior quality. They are tested and selected by our own tea expert, and meet the un- qualified approval of the most discriminating tea users.

YOUNG HYSON TEA.

A mild sweet-drawing, green Chinese tea of light but distinctive flavor.

THE TRUTH AS RE- VEALED BY AN EX- PERT'S EXAMINATION.

Young Hyson.—This tea is worth at the present time about 13½ to 14 cents. It is a tea only suitable for lumber camps and logging camps and is not suitable for consumption in the household and is not sold to the household tea buyer in the Northwest. We buy these teas and only offer them to the lum- ber and logging trade, who will have to pay this year 14½ to 15 cents. For the last ten years they have paid about 11½ cents for this grade of teas. The market is higher this year and last year than it has been for many years, due to the conditions.

THE CLAIM.

GUNPOWDER TEA.

A superior quality of mild- flavored, sweet, green tea. De- rives its name from the peculiar shape into which the leaves are rolled.

MIXED TEA.

Imported teas of choicest growth, mixed in right propor- tion to produce a superior blend.

BLACK FORMOSA OOLONG TEA.

Leaves of superior growth, imported from the island of Formosa. Delicate in flavor with the flowery fragrance that is a distinguishing feature of Formosa Oolong.

GREEN JAPAN TEA.

Of rich quality that appeals to all who prefer a mild, sweet drawing Japan tea.

UNCOLORED JAPAN TEA.

Basket fired. A sweet draw- ing Japan tea of mild flavor and rich quality.

THE TRUTH, ETC.

Basket Fired Japan.—This tea is worth if first crop, 22 cents; if second crop, 21 cents, and if third crop, about 19½ cents. I should judge this tea was probably second crop tea worth, as I stated above, about 21 cents a pound.

The costs that we have given you are the costs that it would take to import these teas this year.

I presume the Basket Fired Japan tea would retail at from 35 to 40 cents a pound.

In other words, the mail-order house was on some of the above grades more than doubling its money, and on no grade was it mak- ing less than 100 per cent. gross.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

Mr. H. L. Werkeiser, Hazleton, Pa., sends in a paper bag on which he has had an advertisement printed. It is hard to do good printing on a paper bag, for the paper is usually rather rough, and if the printing is done after the bag is made up, as is usual, it is very difficult to make a good job. The bag sent is a small affair. I suppose a 2 or 3-pound bag. Here is the reduced reproduction of it:—

Of course this "You'll Look a Long Way" is a stock cut that is sold to retail merchants to be yoked up with any advertisement that can be written around it. As readers hereof know, I haven't a very high opinion of stock cuts—a good snappy headline fitted to the particular advertisement is as good or better, I believe.

This is pretty poor printing, though possibly as good as a great many paper bag advertisements. To begin with, I notice that the printer has put an "h" in Mr. Werkeiser's name. This is pretty nearly inexcusable, it seems to me. A printer who is so careless as to misspell the name of his own customer in printing which he turns out is pretty near the limit. Also I notice that he has printed the line beginning "before you, etc." so carelessly that the tops of the letters don't show, and I would not have been able to read the words at all if Mr. Werkeiser hadn't written them in in pencil. I wonder if he wrote them in for all his customers. I think this is also pretty nearly inexcusable, even admitting the difficulties that usually attend the printing of paper bags.

Outside of the typographical features of this advertisement, is it a good advertisement? Of course nothing but general advertising can very well be put on a paper bag, which is usually printed up ahead. For instance, you can't advertise a one week's bargain or anything like that. But on the other hand, you could advertise some particular brand of goods that you wanted to feature, like your own brand of coffee or tea. If I had any such thing I should always prefer to give this advertising to it, rather than give it to general advertising like this, that is really worth little or nothing. I don't consider that this advertisement of Mr. Werkeiser's, even if it could be read, is really worth anything at all. It is one of those platitudes that people see duplicated so often that they pay no attention to it. If I were Mr. Werkeiser, I should pick out some goods that I would like to increase the sale of, and I should give them all this sort of advertising that I could.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Want New Plan Adopted for Selling Future Eastern Canned Goods.

The W. N. Clark Co., of Rochester, N. Y., has issued the following statement regarding the usual methods of selling California canned fruits, salmon, etc.:—

> Dear Sir:—The writer has been considering very deeply the selling methods on future canned goods as used by the California packers, pineapple packers and salmon packers. They are much superior to th methods used by the Easte packers, and I believe we ca again take a lesson from th West.
> I refer to the selling of f ture fruits, subject to buyer approval of opening prices an deferring the naming of th prices until they know pa prospects.
> The effect of this policy the buyer is a good one. does not give him months shop around and pit one pack against another. He books h order subject to the prices an when prices are made he h to say yes or no, and if th prices are reasonable he more liable to say yes. In fa it makes him glad to get th goods. It changes their po tion and puts the control of th selling in the hands of th packer, where it belongs, rath than in the hands of the jo ber. It puts the "shoe on th other foot."
> Of course, when special work is done, this policy cann be adopted, but, as you a aware, the volume of fruit so on specialty work is sligh The main volume is under th buyer's label for our full li such as strawberries, cherri raspberries, pears, plums an apples. I believe all these iten could be sold under such policy. I believe also that fro the experience in the past se son that most canners will in the mood of the writer, an would welcome such a policy
> I do not believe that serio objection would be made to th change by the jobbers, wh have often stated that they d not believe in buying future At any rate, they are appa ently satisfied with this metho as their purchases of Californi fruits are certainly muc heavier than they are on Eas ern fruits.
> I would like to see this ma ter agitated among the Ne York, Michigan, Oregon an Washington packers. I woul like to see some recommenda tions from the Fruit Sectio of the National Canners' Asso ciation and do not know of better time than the preser one to have same agitated.
> As it is now, with our pres ent method of selling future on the average of years, w are sure to lose. Competitio in selling futures is so kee that they are sold on a ver close basis on a minimum o profit, so that if you do get fai crops you get but a norma profit. Then, there are year when you lose heavily, making the average against you. Th chances to lose are greater that the chances to win.

When You Want Goods, You Want Them

Our experience with retailers is that when they sign a specialty order in good faith, really meaning to take the goods, as most retailers do to-day, they want the goods just as soon as they can get them.

There is no way to get them which is as prompt and quick as to sign only orders that bear either one or the other of the stamps shown above. Practically all such orders are promptly filled by jobbers to-day because the manufacturer guarantees them to be good orders.

If you sign a specialty order which has no stamp on it, you may get your goods and you may not. Or you may get them long after the desire for them has evaporated.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

There is really only one question about nationally advertised goods. Everybody agrees that they sell better than any others, because the manufacturer has created a demand for them which with unknown brands must be created by the retailer.

That one question is profit—do they pay a sufficient profit? Have you been foolish enough to say, because a few nationally advertised brands pay insufficient profit, that you will turn against all nationally advertised goods as a class?

Dozens of retailers are bankrupt this minute without even suspecting it. Their storekeeping system is so poor that they haven't the least conception of how much they are worth or whether they are worth anything.

Heinz Holiday Varieties

Christmas and New Year's feasts would lack the holiday flavor if Mince Meat Pie or Plum Pudding were not included in the menu. These are varieties which every customer is glad to have the merchant suggest at this season.

Heinz Mince Meat is made of big dessert raisins, fruity currants, rich suet, fragrant spices, and selected apples blended in just the right proportions.

Heinz Plum Pudding consists of equally choice materials made into a pudding surprisingly light and with a flavor that is a triumph of the cooking art.

Ask the Heinz salesman for the new, striking posters and window sheets to remind your customers of these specially seasonable varieties.

Making People Eat More Codfish

If you have an idea that codfish is codfish, you are as wrong as you can be. There are as many grades of codfish as there are of butter.

There is all the difference in the world between Gorton's Codfish and some codfish we could show you, which is perfectly pure.

Any one of your customers could detect this difference. Perhaps they have detected it and stopped using the codfish you have been selling them.

If all the codfish was like Gorton's, the consumption of codfish would increase five fold. Gorton's Codfish is pure, old-fashioned codfish of the finest quality money can buy. You can sell more of it than you can sell of any other brand, because more people will want it, and all that want it will want more of it. Your jobber.

Jobbers Will Try to Stop Returned Goods Evil

National Wholesale Grocers' Association Issues Statement Telling Why Retailers Return Goods to Jobbers for Credit. Some Reasons Just, Others Unjust. Jobbers Will Try to Adopt Uniform Rules on the Subject.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has received from the National Wholesale Grocers' Association a statement regarding the widespread practice by retailers of returning goods to jobbers for credit. The association calls this a crying evil which affects every wholesaler, and suggests that the jobbing trade should adopt rules controlling it. The following is not all the statement, but it is a good part of it.—Ed.]

"Returned goods" is one of those items of blind loss which is a problem of every wholesale grocer. Limited investigation shows no uniformity in handling the problem.

Before consideration can be given to method, it is necessary to know what goods are returned. Experience shows that canned foods comprise the largest percentage of returned goods. Cereals and dried fruits are next, while bottled goods, specialty orders, coffee, cigars, tea and sugar are returned infrequently or not at all. It has been found that few jobbers keep a record of the exact amount of returns for given commodities, and that no accurate figures are obtainable showing what percentage of the total sales of each commodity are returned. Estimates of total returns received vary from one-half of one per cent. to two per cent. In making these estimates the differences due to local conditions and practices must be considered. Firms doing an extensive business within the trucking limits of the community in which they are located can afford to accept returned goods. Other houses doing a large business to more distant points of delivery will make allowances rather than assume expensive return transportation charges. The practice of returning labels, particularly for canned foods, in lieu of the goods would have a material effect on the percentage of returns. Although this practice may save return freight charges, it leaves little protection from fraudulent claims.

Almost all wholesale grocers admit that the following are factors in the problem: Deterioration of merchandise after delivery, defective containers, market declines, over-purchasing by retailer, refusal of future orders, stuffing of orders by either specialty or jobbers' salesmen, and jobbers' errors. Some of these causes are, at least in part, within the control of the jobber, while the correction of conditions from other causes must be secured through the retailer or manufacturer.

Proper education and control of salesmen ,and co-operation with retailers from the educational point of view should do much to eliminate some of the causes. Efficient methods will reduce to the minimum returns on account of errors.

The indiscriminate return of goods should be discouraged by fixing a time limit after delivery, after which no returned goods will be accepted.

If a uniform practice were adopted and adhered to, far less returns would be accepted as a matter of business policy to protect the good will of the retailer. At the same time the retailer would use greater care to avoid return goods which, although wholesome, had become shop-worn because of failure to clean up old stock or because of laxity in the care of the goods.

To avoid the return of goods for insufficient cause, and for the protection of the jobber from imposition, definite rules should be established. A report on all unsatisfactory goods should be secured from the customer by the salesman, after he has made an inspection, and before a return is permitted. If the report justifies the return, written authority with shipping instructions, tags, etc., should be sent to the customer.

Buyers should be informed as to the kind of goods returned and the reason for their return. Information of this kind should be the means of securing more careful buying and of providing material on the basis of which protection against inferior goods could be secured from the manufacturer.

Some wholesalers have found it desirable to make deductions from full value on their allowances of returned goods which have been found to be shop-worn or unsalable for causes within the control of the retailer.

Careless methods in adjusting allowances for return goods are often the source of unnecessary losses. In no case should credit be permitted without full knowledge of the claim. Although the salesman may be used in securing the facts, the firm should approve the claim and arrange for sending a credit voucher. Deductions from collections by salesmen should be forbidden except on the presentation of a credit voucher by the customer.

Realizing the difficulty of controlling the return of goods by distant customers, definite rules should be formulated, printed and distributed for the guidance of the retailer. Salesmen should be instructed to call attention to the rules and the jobber, bearing in mind that all just claims should be allowed, should hold to his rules without fear or favor. Local draymen should not be permitted to accept returned goods without a written order from the jobber. Customers should be required to submit their complaints to the house before returning the goods. Spoiled goods should not be destroyed without authority to do so.

From an accounting standpoint the importance of deducting all allowances for returned goods from gross sales should not be overlooked. If the goods returned are found to be salable or can be put into salable condition they should be returned to stock and added to the inventory in the same way as if they had been received from the manufacturer.

Salesmen should be warned against overstocking their customers and against selling a class of goods unsuitable to the trade of the retailer.

In filling orders the greatest care should be given to see that exactly the goods ordered are furnished. Substitution should be avoided. Salesmen should use the gr of care in describing the artic all orders. The brand, the s the container, the size of the age and all other necessary should be carefully covered.

Provided that salable goo refused by customers, freight charges may be sav disposing of them to some customer in the same territor obtaining a definite underst with manufacturers, extra co handling may be avoided by a ing for the return of goods ly to them, instead of the costly way of returning to th ber who may be required to to the manufacturer.

Retailers should be educa return goods by the cheapest to carefully mark goods sh where they came from and t ward the bill of lading by n the wholesaler.

Promptness in the adjustm claims for returned goods wil unnecessary irritation of the r and will prove an asset to the in soliciting further orders.

The should have his protection fr manufacturer and be free fro sible imposition by the re The retailer on the other should be entitled to just repa for all unsatisfactory goods ered by the jobber by error, sight or carelessness.

Prompt filling of orders wil inate some refusals of goo customers. Arrangements fo curing articles not in stock be such as not to delay the d of other items. The credit d ment should avoid holding pending investigation so long necessitate the retailer purc goods elsewhere.

ere are several movements tak- ɔrm in this city for investigat- igh cost of food products. The gest of these movements is a aign, said to be backed by the ɔr, to establish public markets is city at which various food ıcts will be sold direct by the ıcer. There is widespread ac- ion here that the middlemen ɔoosting prices of almost all products merely for their own . The most important hap- ıg of the week along these was the issuance of the fol- ıg statement by State Food missioner John J. Dillon:—

Federal and county prose- tors in this State declare we ed new laws—either Federal State—to stop the boosting prices for all foodstuffs. ıey claim the manipulators e well within their legal ghts when charging, if they sire, $1 for a loaf of bread 50 cents for a quart of milk, d that none can be prose- ted unless it be discovered he has entered into a conspiracy to set prices.

These officials state that it is very hard to prove conspiracy and the only way to meet the present situation is to get laws that prevent purveyors of food from charging anything more than what might be termed an honest profit.

I disagree with them, for I know by observation that any law regulating anything can be dodged by the men such law is meant to curb. Their ill-gotten gains give them unlimited funds for legal talent that will guide them so they will at all times be within the law.

THE WAY TO BREAK PRICES.

The way to break the prices of food is for the State to go into the distribution business. Consider what the express companies did when the parcel post was established. Let the work authorized for this department be developed and soon there will be a marked reduction in prices, for independent food distributors will immediately cut their prices.

When the State wanted to build a canal, distribute mineral water from Saratoga County and furnish cheap insurance for the people, it did not depend on investigation and report, but put up the money for the proposition and developed along business lines.

None of these undertakings, with the possible exception of water, are as important to the people of New York City as their food supply; but we may as well admit that so far the city, State and Federal authorities are afraid to tackle the food problem and to deal with it as they have dealt with other propositions. The speculators and manipulators and gamblers in foods are numerous, powerful, well entrenched and ready to fight. If a single official attempts to interfere with the franchise to rob the consuming public, they organize and spend money to defeat him for the next election.

New York State has established a department to assist and regulate in the distribution of food, but the distributors and speculators and gamblers in food have opposed it. The food supply and distribution in

Mr. Retailer, are you getting your share of the big Aunt Jemima business?

The sales on Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour and Aunt Jemima Buckwheat Flour thus far this season are 60% in excess of those for the corresponding period of a year ago.

Unless your sales on these popular products are much greater than ever before, you are not getting the amount of business that you should get.

is nearly exhausted; better look after this now, call your jobber and have him leave you a supply by next delivery.

WITH THE EDITOR

Another Exhibition of Ignorance.

And now it is the New York "Tribune" that takes a whack at some views this paper expressed recently regarding the grocer's profit. The following appeared in both its morning and evening editions a few days ago:—

SQUEEZING THE CONSUMER.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" in its current issue offers the following advice to retailers: "Consumers are being educated to-day by a variety of conditions to pay good prices for everything they buy. The retail merchant who doesn't take advantage of that had better drop out. Never again will he have such a chance."

To judge by the experience of consumers, such a suggestion seems like carrying coals to Newcastle. Whether or not the prices that retailers of foodstuffs are obtaining represent more than their usual profit, there is no reason to doubt that they represent all the dealers figure the traffic can bear. The merchants respond readily to any education which teaches price-raising. The consumers, poor creatures, buy what they must and pay what they have to. It is certain they would be glad of some education which would teach them how to obtain more for their money.

This is another exhibition of ignorance, akin to that made by several other New York papers in discussing the same subject. Perhaps many a retailer, if he could, would charge all the traffic would bear. But in the average case he can't do it. Not only can't he charge all the profit that the traffic will bear, but in many cases he can't charge any profit at all. If the "Tribune" had the information which it should have before it starts to discuss something, it would know that.

The suggestion of this paper was merely that the retailer should use the present situation to put his profits where they honestly belong.

The Spice Fraud Again.

The case recently reported to this paper by a wholesale grocery salesman, who accused an unnamed spice manufacturer of fraud in packing one ounce of pepper in a two-ounce tin, has attracted considerable attention all over the country, because a somewhat new principle is involved. The "Interstate Grocer," of St. Louis, Mo., takes the same view of the case that the New York "Journal of Commerce" took:—

> Possibly the Department of Agriculture would rule that this was an infringement of the law, as it is deception of the rankest sort. The remedy, so far as the retail grocer is concerned, is to examine package goods more closely, read the labels carefully and note what they say regarding net weight of contents. It cannot be conceived that any reputable spice manufacturing house would be guilty of such a trick, and as the salesman declines to give the name of the concern, there is no way of knowing to whom he refers in making the charges he does.

I have some knowledge of food laws, not only their letter but what the courts have held to be spirit, and I have no doubt ever that any court would nounce this to be a fraudulen representation the minute the tion was raised.

Some Important Law.

The Alabama case in wh $20,000 verdict was re against McNeill & because a salmon unde label poisoned the plaintiff's band, is highly important to body who fathers package which he does not produce course it has always been th that a packer who puts up a tomatoes is liable to any con who should happen to come to through it. But for every or manufacturer who actuall duces the goods which bea name, I suppose there are a hu whose name appears on which they do not produce A decision that these will heard to say: "I did not p myself, but thought it all rig exceedingly important. It co them to guarantee somebody work and somebody else's pro work and products as to whic have only a limited power spection, for the goods are when they get them.

The moral is that not only buyers of this class use every sible means of protecting selves in the purchase of such ucts, but it would also be we them to take a special guarant wholesomeness and soundness the real packer.

Fire!

The National Fire Protective Association sends this paper a "Holiday Fire Bulletin" in which we find the following "Warnings for Stores":—

Holiday fires in stores while filled with people are usually holocausts.

Light, inflammable decorations make fires easy to start and easy to spread. A match, a gas flame or an electrical defect may do it.

Watch Gas Jets! Decorations may be carried against them by air currents.

Watch Smokers! Do not permit them to light cigars inside buildings.

Do not make the slightest change in electric wiring without consulting electrical inspector.

Read Your Insurance Policies! Before attempting any hasty or ill-advised decorations which may cause fire, examine your insurance contract and see if your policies contain anything like this:—

> "This entire Policy unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void," &c., &c.—"If the hazard be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured."

If you burn, you want your indemnity; do nothing therefore to impair your contract.

This is good advice—by experts. Statistics show that an enormous increase takes place in the number of fires around holiday time.

Can a Man Sell Bread Cheaper in Trenton Than in Newark, N. J.

Kolb People Have Asked for Indictment of Ward Baking Co., of New York, Because They Are Selling a Thirty Ounce Loaf in Trenton and a Twenty Ounce Loaf in Newark for the Same Money.

The State of New Jersey has a law making it a criminal offense to sell one's goods at a lower price in one section than in another, where the purpose of the lower price was to injure a competitor. The Kolb Baking Co., of Philadelphia, who sell bread in Trenton, N. J., have invoked this law against a competitor, the Ward Baking Co., of New York, who also sell bread in Trenton and other New Jersey points.

The Kolb people say that the Ward Company is selling in Trenton a loaf of bread weighing 30 ounces for 10 cents, while in Newark, where there is less competition, the Ward concern sells a 20-ounce loaf for 10 cents. This fact the Kolb people claim, shows that the Ward Company is out to destroy competition, but the Ward Company say that it merely shows that they will do more with competition than they will do without it, which is a principle recognized by the law.

The Kolb people have aske the indictment of the Ward pe nufacturers of food specialties cing perhaps the most critical ion in their experience as a quence of the soaring prices actically everything used in business. The time has come every manufacturer in the ry is confronted with serious ifficult problems as a result of uropean war. While in other there has been an increase 40 to 300 per cent. in price v materials, there has been no ce in price of a great many odities of the specialty manu- ers.

e problem confronting us to- s a new year looms up before to keep our prices as low as le to the consumer and to give e distributors, the wholesaler and the retailer, their customary profit to which they are entitled. If the price goes up too high, the demand for the commodities, built up after years of labor, will be curtailed.—J. E. Linihan, Former General Manager United Cereal Mills, at the American Specialty Convention.

The specialty men can be of much assistance to the retail grocer. When a new specialty is brought upon the market or a change of price takes place, his first consideration should be a fair profit for the retailer. You are all aware that business to-day with its increased cost, greater service, higher priced help, etc., plainly shows the necessity of allowing a larger margin of profit than was necessary ten or fifteen years ago. I think that the small profits on a great many articles sold by the specialty men have been the cause to some extent of the failures in the retail grocery business. There are a great many manufacturers who, when raw material advances, raise the price to the retailer but make no effort to educate the consumer to the higher price. I feel that the manufacturers should cater stronger to the individual successful grocer and less to chain stores, department stores and kitchen stores. By kitchen stores I mean the small store that opens up with about $100 capital, and the jobber furnishes the balance and takes a chance on the business being a partial success. —John H. Schaefer, President National Retail Grocers' Association, at the American Specialty Convention.

I don't know of a thing that the States and the Federal Government would so heartily join in as the idea of Federal sanitary supervision. If this association really wants to do something for the people, its members should see to it that a law authorizing sanitary inspection by the United States Government is put on the statute books of the Government.—Dr. S. J. Crumbine, Secretary Kansas State Board of Health, at the American Specialty Convention.

This is the time for the wholesale grocer and the retailer of coffee to get together and put booze out of business by offering wholesome coffee as a substitute. Twenty-four States have gone dry and if we think right we are glad of it. We can help this righteous war upon a common enemy and put the mail order house out of business so far as we are concerned by persuading the retail grocer to wake up and take advantage of the new opportunities the sweep of prohibition is bringing to him.—R. W. McCreery, of Marshalltown, Iowa, at the National Coffee Roasters' Association Convention.

Millions of dollars have been spent for the advertising of soups, while but $50,000 was expended during the past year by coffee men in behalf of an industry representing $200,000,000. One thing seems

For the Serious Consideration of all Retail Grocers

From various sources of information we learn that at this winter's session of the Legislature, in several States, bills may be offered which would seriously affect all methods of premium-giving. In fact, if such bills were to be passed, all manufacturers packing their own coupons and giving their own premiums would be prevented from employing this method of advertising.

We do not believe the retail grocers wish or have any intention of endorsing bills of this kind and we ask that you carefully consider any proposed legislation before endorsing a bill which would prevent the manufacturer from offering his own coupons.

A premium coupon packed by the manufacturer and redeemed by the manufacturer direct from the consumer costs the retailer nothing. It causes him no annoyance but helps him sell goods, as the coupons are of intrinsic value to the consumer.

There are different methods of premium-giving and it would be a detriment to your business, unjust to your customers and unfair to the manufacturer to have bills passed which, while intended only to affect certain methods, would prohibit all branches of this great profit-sharing mode of advertising.

Therefore, be sure you thoroughly understand the real issues before endorsing any anti-coupon measure clear, and that is that there is a widely disseminated impression that coffee as a drink is harmful. This impression, brought about very largely by the advertising of "substitutes" by manufacturers who have spent $100,000 during the last year, has permeated many avenues of life. If you have a real case to offset the impression you should present it to the public. Your case should be developed in a positive way and not in an apologetic sense. —C. C. Parlin, of the Curtis Publishing Company, at the National Coffee Roasters' Association Convention.

Coffee roasters must reach a common understanding with both wholesalers and retailers of coffee if the industry is to go forward. Time was when we controlled our output. But methods of distribution and mediums have multiplied. We are now putting out about 40 per cent. of the coffee consumed in the United States, while wholesalers, drug houses, premium concerns and peddlers are distributing 60 per cent. in a haphazard fashion. The sale of vast quantities of coffee which has become stale while waiting for buyers proves the inefficiency of the present retail store system. Eighty-five per cent. of small retailers, I venture to say, take no interest in salesmanship. Premiums undoubtedly have been a factor in the creation of business. Several schemes have been proposed to eliminate them—by legislation or education of the consumer to demand full value in the product he buys. If the premium plan helps the retailer I see no reason why he should not use it.—Frank R. Seelye, of Chicago, at the National Coffee Roasters' Association Convention.

Probably No Embargo on Food.

Government executive officials, as well as the majority of the members of Congress, are said to be opposed to the imposition of an embargo upon food products of the United States. This is the consensus of opinion expressed by various officials who were interviewed in Washington during the week. Furthermore, the general impression is that President Wilson is not only opposed to any such scheme, but that he is doing all in his power to prevent any discussion of it in official quarters. The White House unofficially maintains that the matter has never been broached and the members of the Cabinet declare that they have not considered it and have had no one to suggest it to them. Notwithstanding this general opposition to an embargo, it is understood that a number of propositions will be introduced in Congress this winter looking to this end.

THE NEW YORK LETTER

New York City has been studied and investigated and reported on time and time again.

AS IT IS IN THIS CITY.

Everybody familiar with it knows that New York City has no terminal or wholesale market provisions that would be worthy of a country town. We know that the system of handling food products in wholesale sections of the city could not be worse if the purpose was to establish an archaic, inefficient and extravagant system for the distribution of it.

We know that it passes from one speculator to another until five to seven handlings and profits are taken out of it before it reaches the ultimate consumer. We know that for every dollar paid by the housewife for food at least 65 cents on an average goes to speculator and distributor, and the man that produces it on the farm gets less than 35 cents.

Our cold storage facilities are equally inadequate. Such as we have is controlled by speculators in foods. Neither the producer nor the consumer has access to them, with a result that in times like these the speculator is in a position to exact any price that his greed may dictate for the food products that he controls through his monopoly of cold storage facilities.

At least $7,000,000 a year can be saved in the wholesale handling of live poultry for New York City; $10,000,000 on eggs and a similar amount on dressed poultry; $10,000,000 can be saved on distribution of butter, and besides these savings in the necessary cost of the physical handling of these products at the present time an efficient system of marketing would save the people untold millions in the speculative price that they are now paying for it. In the one item of milk alone $15,000,000 can be saved to the people in the distribution of it.

A Distinct Business

Pretzel baking is a distinct business, entirely different in character from the ordinary baking business.

It demands distinct machinery, distinct ovens, and special bakers.

The principal customers of The American Pretzel Company are the large cake and cracker bakeries of the country—they jobbing practically fifty per cent. of the output.

The pretzel baking business has no relation to other lines of baking, and is impracticable so far as other bakers are concerned.

The great volume of business handled by The American Pretzel Company enables it to operate on a very small margin of profit and at the same time to meet all fixed and dividend charges and provide liberally for the future.

We are offering the way is now quoted at 9¼ cents per pound. In June, 1914, it was 3-16 of a cent higher than that. The reason is that the sea has practically been closed to Germany and Austria, who usually take about four milllion bags of Rio and Santos coffee every year. That has made it necessary to throw the available supply of Brazil coffee in here and the weakness in the market is the result.

The local department stores here are looking forward to the largest Christmas business in their history, in spite of the fact that most all prices are higher than they were last year. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has on its subscription books subscribers who have been such for twenty or twenty-five years, in some cases even longer. Unfortunately, prior to a few years ago the subscription records were not kept in such a way as to show when each subscriber first came upon the lists. Therefore we cannot go to the lists and pick these old subscribers names out ourselves.

We ask every subscriber who has been a subscriber of this journal more than fifteen years continuously, to be good enough to send their names to this office.

You may not have seen much chance for saving there, but there is a chance all the same.

There is a device on the Howe Sanitary Refrigerator (the double air lock door) which will save you 20 per cent. of your ice bill. If you spend $10 a week for ice, this is a saving of $2—$100 a year.

We can prove this if you will give us the chance.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, but the tendency is still firmer. There is a strong undertone to the tea market. Demand very satisfactory.

Coffee.

Coffee is undoubtedly weaker on account of the very large available supply. There is an enormous quantity of coffee en route to this country. We are now probably the only clearing house for Brazil coffee. Prices are quite low and may go a shade lower before the first of the year, as the demand will undoubtedly be low. Milds are unchanged, except Bogotas, which are a shade weaker. Java and Mocha unchanged.

Sugar.

There has been no change in the sugar market during the week. Occasional shipments of raws at a shade off are heard of, but the general situation is about unchanged. One Pennsylvania refinery has reduced granulated to 7.45, but this refinery cuts comparatively little ice; the other refiners are unchanged. The Cuban situation in raw sugar is a little backward on account of rains, and the Western beet granulated season also seems to be a little backward. The time of dull demand is at hand and it may be that prices will shade a little from now on.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is very firm, and compound syrup is firm in sympathy with it. The demand is fair. Sugar syrup and molasses are both firm and unchanged.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market is very quiet and easier than it has been for some time, $1.35 being quoted for 3s and $1.05 for 2s, with practically no sales at the moment. Corn is still firm, although there isn't very much doing just now, and not likely to be for some time. The market rules about $1.20 for actual business, $1.30 asking price. Peas are getting pretty well cleaned up, and it is very difficult to secure desirable grades at reasonable figures. There is no special changes in anything other than spinach, which is very strong, the market ruling about $1.40 for 3s, $4.50 to $4.75 for 10s. New York apples are quoted at $2.60 to $2.75 factory. Nothing of any consequence in other lines at the moment. California peaches are pretty well cleaned up on the coast; market ruling $1.75 for extra standards.

Fish.

Mackerel remains unchanged for the week. All values steady to firm; demand good. Cod, hake and haddock are still very high and in fair demand considering the price. Salmon is still working up and all values are very high on account of scarcity. Arrivals have been a little better during the week, but the market is not materially weakened. The demand is very active. Domestic and imported sardines are all very high and about unchanged in price.

Beans and Peas.

Beans are slightly easier, particularly as to peas and red kidneys. Marrows are firm with no anticipated break in price. Limas are strong, spot market ruling about 8 cents, with no quotations from the coast to-day. Last figures to be had out there were 7¼.

Dried Fruits.

There is practically no change in any line.

Butter.

There is an active demand for all grades of butter. The market is firm at prices ranging about 1 cent per pound advance over last week. The make is decreasing to some extent, which is usual for this season of the year. The quality arriving is a good average. The consumptive demand is good considering the high price, and we look for a continued fair demand, at prices ranging about the same as they are at present for the coming week. The make of nearby butter is extremely light.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs continue to be very light and the market is very firm at the recent advance. All eggs are being sold immediately on arrival and the production is very light, which is customary at this season of the year. We do not look for much change, however, from the present price while the consumptive demand continues as good as it is at present.

Cheese.

The stocks in cheese are reported to be very light. The market is firm at prices ranging the same as a week ago. The light supply is due to considerable cheese being exported. The consumptive demand is good considering the high prices. We do not look for much change from the present conditions in the immediate future.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is steady, with a normal consumptive demand, prices ranging the same as a week ago. Pure lard is firm at ¼ cent per pound advance over a week ago, with reported light supply and good consumptive demand. Compound is also firm at prices ranging about ¼ cent advance, and we do not look for any change of any consequence in the next few days. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all firm, with moderate demand and unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Fruits.

During the past few days there has been very heavy buying of evaporated fruit throughout the drying section. This buying has practically cleaned up these goods from first hands. The amount to be marketed from now on is small. While we have had a considerable advance, prices are not high yet, and especially so if one will compare prices on other dried and canned fruits. Fresh apples are selling at such high prices th will cause a heavier consump evaporated fruits generally.

Apple waste and chops similar position to evap apples. With the small ma evaporated apples you can stand the supply of waste small also. Outside buying o products has been small s owing to buyers being und impression that our market is to react like last season. Yo to forget last season and our actual condition. The s not here, not in any other sec the United States. On these it is another case of buying with no regrets—delay and y regret.

There have no arrivals whatever of Nor- herrings. It seems that there be quite a lot of fall and g herrings offered from Nor- but so far, Norwegian ship- have been soliciting bids for herring from American im- rs, and, of course, American rters are not willing to make bids, particularly as the Nor- an shippers expect extremely prices for their herrings. ther or not the American ket will be interested, remains e seen. At the present mo- the particular trade that s the Norwegian herrings is fied with the direct cargo of nd herrings which arrived direct from Iceland. These ngs are selling in a good -to-mouth way.

Norway Mackerel.—It seems e absolutely sure now that will be no arrivals of Nor- way mackerel this season. The small quantity of mackerel which was caught in Norway was bought up by the Norwegian Government to be distributed to the consumers at comparatively low figures, so there will be none for export.

Imported sardines have been selling freely. Prices are very strong, and tending higher. In Norway there has not been any catch of late, and consequently prices are extremely firm. In Portugal they have had some catch of rather small fish. In France, of course, the fishing of sardines is over, and the fishing of sprats which should take place now is so far a total failure. Considering that tinplate is advancing steadily, and tinplate is extremely scarce in Europe, it is not likely that we shall see lower prices for imported sardines in the near future. The trade seem to be realizing that, and are buying freely at present figures, which considering everything, are rather reasonable.

Wheat and Flour.

In last week's letter we said that Europe was confronted with a desperate situation in obtaining sufficient supplies of wheat. It has been most disheartening to see one after another of their sources of supply fail. First came our disappointing winter wheat crop, which was shortly followed by our spring wheat failure, and next in order came the disasters to the Canadian and Argentina crops. It is indeed appalling to realize that in North America alone there is a shortage of 600,000,000 bushels, as compared with last year, and to this must be added nearly 100,000,000 more for Argentina.

In view of these successive calamities in the Western Hemisphere, it is not surprising that immediate steps are to be taken by the British Government to control the consumption of wheat.

There is no assurance that Australia, which harvests in January, will have a normal crop, indeed, there is every prospect of a very small crop, for the area this year is 17 per cent. less than last year, being only 10,800,000 acres as against 13,000,000 acres harvested last year. But no matter what the out-turn may be in Australia, it is the difficulty of transportation from that country that constitutes the pressing problem. A peck of wheat in America or Argentina is worth more to Europe than a bushel in Australia, because of the difficulty of transportation from the latter country, yet it appears that fate has decreed that the greatest surplus crop should be in the most distant country, where to obtain one cargo a ship must perform a 24,000 mile journey, or equivalent to sailing around the world.

The chief event of the week is the proposal of Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, to have the British Parliament enact a measure compelling the use throughout the British Isles of whole wheat flour instead of white flour, and the prohibition of the manufacture of fancy cakes and pastry.

It is inevitable that some such legislation must be enacted to conserve the food supply. Three and a half months of the crop year have already elapsed, and it is quite probable that it will take a month or more before any legislation along this line would become operative, so that whatever economy is effected will be during the last seven months of the crop year.

Let us see what the probable saving will be:—

The United Kingdom imported last year 232,000,000 bushels,

Your Trade

Every grocer is entitled to as much of his community's business as the quality of his goods and service can command. Some get the lion's share —others hang on and just make expenses. Why?

It is largely a question of quality and service. Goods that are known for their high quality command the great bulk of the trade.

N. B. C. advertising has carried the message of the best biscuit baked to nearly everyone, nearly everywhere. A display of the famous In-er-Seal Trade Mark packages is an asset to any grocer. People recognize these superior products as an indication of a quality store and do their regular buying accordingly.

which with their native crop, gives an average monthly consumption of, say, 25,000,000 bushels, so therefore a saving of 10 per cent. for seven months would equal 17,500,000 bushels, or if 20 per cent., 35,000,000 bushels. We believe that a saving of 20 per cent. is the very maximum that can be hoped for, and if this will conserve the wheat supplies by 35,000,000 bushels, it is well worth the effort.

The present average extraction of wheat into flour is 70 per cent., namely, four and two-thirds bushels of wheat (280 pounds) make one barrel of flour. If Britons are to eat whole wheat flour during the last seven or eight months of their crop year, it would effect a saving of approximately 60,000,000 bushels. The present average monthly consumption of 25,000,000 is producing 17,500,000 bushels of flour which, under 100 per cent. extraction, could be made from 17,500,000 bushels of wheat, or a monthly saving of 7,500,000 bushels, or, say, 52,500,000 bushels for a seven months' period, or 60,000,000 if it could be made effective at once and continue for eight months, December 1 to August 1, 1917.

Theoretically these calculations are sound, but as a matter of fact, they are not practical, as present stocks of flour already in the United Kingdom and in transit and contracted for future shipment from the United States and elsewhere, must be taken into account. American millers will not welcome the manufacture of 100 per cent. flour, for the by-product is needed at home, nor will the British farmer favor it, because it will at one stroke remove one class of feed on which he is largely dependent and greatly enhance the value of substitutes.

At this level of prices our wheat market is very sensitive and sellers for a decline have a tendency to exaggerate the importance marketwise of this proposed conservation plan. When the situation is analyzed carefully it is found that the estimated saving makes up only a small part of the world's shortage, and that other countries may be forced to do likewise in order that the world may be fed until some of the 1917 crop in North America can be rushed to the hungry millions of Europe.

Libby, McNeill & Libby Held Liable When Their Salmon Poisons Consumer, Though They Did Not Pack It.

An important decision to food manufacturers and jobbers with private brands was returned by a jury in a United States District Court at Gadsden, Ala., last week, in the case of Mrs. Augusta Trippe, suing Libby, McNeill & Libby for $20,000 damages for the death of her husband, whom she alleged died from the effects of eating salmon sold and guaranteed by the defendant. The verdict returned in this case was for the full amount of the damages sought.

The case hinged entirely on the contention that Libby, McNeill & Libby held themselves out as manufacturers and guarantors of a product they did not make or pack themselves. Both the plaintiff and the defendant had a large number of experts to testify on both sides of the question as to whether or not the defendant died from ptomaine poisoning.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

"That's Good."—It seems a peculiar title for the opening paragraph of this week's talk, but I like it. "That's Good," should be on the point of your tongue continually. You can apply it a hundred times a day and it will save a hundred per cent. profit on the investment.

Cook Book Reading.—Don't you know that it's a good scheme to read up the Cook Book occasionally? Along with different literature that I keep handy on the sitting room table is a well-bound cook book. Why, you can make yourself an "authority" on things. Take canned crab meat or canned shrimp or fresh finnan haddie even. Lots of women don't know how to prepare them. Isn't it nice to be able in an offhand way to tell them all about their preparation, even though you'd make a fearful mess of the practical part of it yourself? Whatever line you're pushing this week, take this pointer—look up the Cook Book and act wise. It's a wonderful help.

"Why Should I Buy Those Beans?"—Or words to that effect I overheard in the grocery salesroom of a New York department store last week. The salesman had his story pat and I was simply delighted to listen to it. He said in substance: "These beans are in the first place genuine, hand picked, double screened York State variety. They're baked, not merely boiled. The baking temperature is so powerful and so effective that all disagreeable gases are removed." Anyway he went on talking about that can of beans as though his reputation as a salesman depended on that particular sale. I saw him write the order for six cans. This simply goes to show the importance of knowing your goods—getting a full, clear, honest understanding of the thing you have to sell—and selling it. Apparently this particular customer called for another brand.

"Another Brand."—Substitution is a delicate thing to dabble with just the same. It doesn't do to run down advertised goods. Men won't put thousands of dollars' worth of advertising into an article that has no merit. Keep that in mind. But if the boss shows you a better article for the same money or less even, and wants that thing pushed, it's up to you to push it just in the way the department store salesman pushed his beans—by showing his reasons.

Use the Stormy Weather.—In other words, get after the people that don't come to you. If I were you I'd suggest something like this to the boss: "There's nothing doing in the store to-day on account of the storm; suppose I get out and pick up a dozen good orders this morning?" Try that, wet days, snowy days, windy days; any day that's an off day.

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

PHILADELPHIA

Here's Some Nut to Crack.

What would you fellows do in a case like this? If you had to fire one of your clerks, and it was a toss-up whether to fire one that you couldn't get along with, but that was a crack-a-jack clerk, or to fire another one that you got along with fine, but wasn't worth two cents as a clerk, which one would you let go?

It ain't as easy as it looks. One of my customers is up against that little thing just now, and he can't make his mind up.

Me, I told him I'd let 'em both go and get a good man that I could get along with. He says he don't know where there are any. He's tried to get one. He's advertised, and asked around, and there don't seem to be any first class men out of a job.

I said I'd take the job myself for $50 a week, but he insulted me, so now I wouldn't go there for anything.

Well, as I say, it ain't so easy. Everybody likes to get along comfortable with his help, and you can't do it when you've got somebody around that rubs you the wrong way. Don't make any difference how good he is—if you and him can't get along it ain't pleasant.

But you don't want a mutt around either, even if he's a nice fellow. You ain't paying him for his company. So he don't know what to do, and I'm asking you what you'd do.

Ain't it funny how many people there is in the world that can't hit it up with each other? The very minute they get where each other are, the sparks begin to fly. I've seen men that way with their wives—that's the very devil, ain't it—and brothers and sisters that way with each other, and fathers and mothers that way with their own children. Being that way with your own children always seems to me like getting mad at your own hand.

That's the way this customer of mine is with this crack-a-jack clerk. The boss is a North of Ireland man and the clerk is a South of Ireland man. Maybe that's got something to do with it, but it ain't got all. Why they can't say anything to each other that the other one don't flare up. I've heard 'em hit at each other right in the store before customers. Anything at all is good for a hot argument. Still, the clerk is an A-1 man and there ain't anything wrong with him anywhere.

The other clerk's a Dutchman and everybody likes him. The boss slaps him on the back and kids with him all the time. But he'd make a better nurse for the baby than he would a clerk. He's sloppy and he forgets, and he's slow, and he ain't got much head, and—oh, he really ain't worth $5 a week. Does the best he can, understand, but it ain't in him.

The boss can't bear to see the last of Herman, and he can't bear to see the last of Jim either. And he can't keep 'em both. I tell you it ain't easy.

I heard Jim and the boss get into an awful red-faced fight one day before six people over whether the Monday of the week before had been rainy! Can you beat it? The boss was trying to fix the time when a shipment of goods come in, and he knew it was on a rainy day that he thought was Monday. You wouldn't think there was much of a fight in that, would you? It was enough for them all right. In five minutes they were at it hammer and tongs. I had to almost pull 'em apart. That's the kind of fellows they are.

"What's the matter with you and Jim, anyway?" I said to the boss one day last summer. "I should think you could get along with a good man like that."

"I don't know," he said. the minute he says anything to contradict him and it's th with him. I've tried to k down, but we simply can't

"Makes it pretty blamed u fortable for both of you,"

"You're right. It does."

"First thing you know leave," I said. "A man lik don't have to work where h comfortable. I'll bet I cou him four jobs to-morrow."

"If you do that you neve to come in here again!" he "Taking a man's help from h that!"

Can you beat it?

I believe it would help a lo boss would take Jim off by h and say, "Here Jim, what anyway? Why ain't we along?"

Talk the whole blame thi that's what I'd do. Nothi talking it out. Maybe the cause for it that could be out.

Trouble is, maybe they'd c other's heads off before th through.

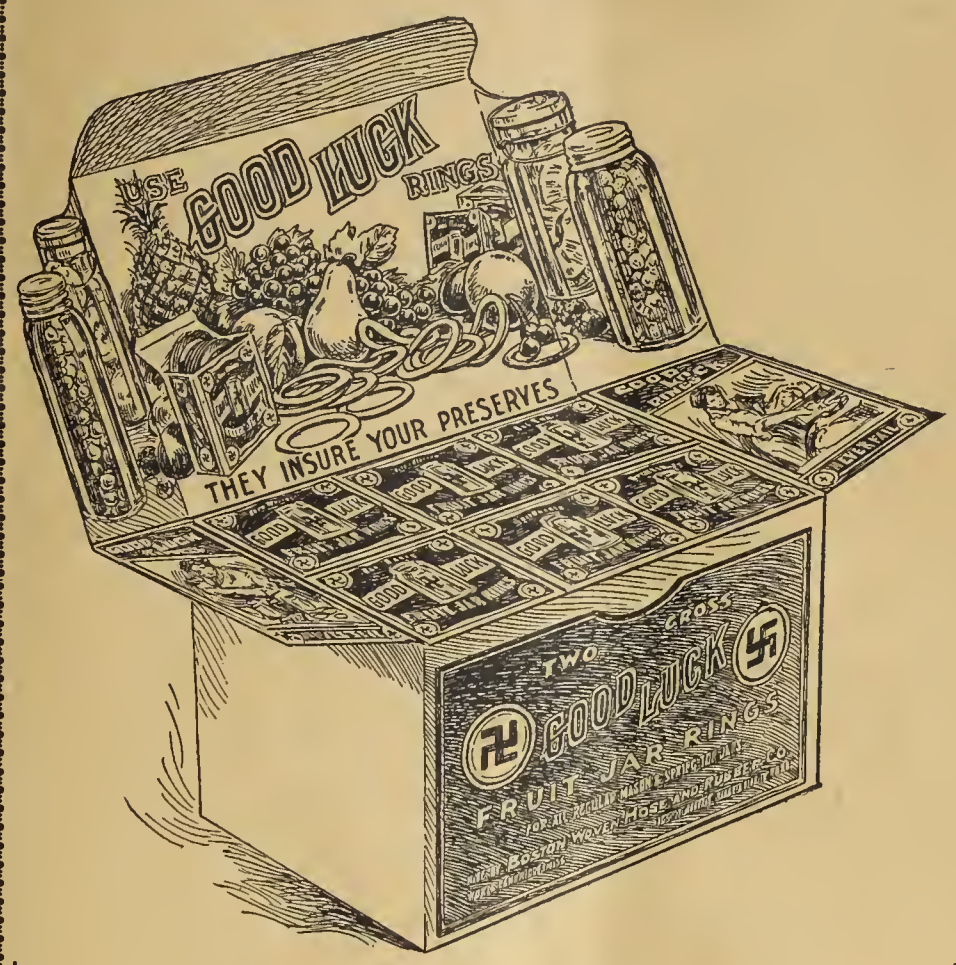
some talk of trying to get the National Wholesale Grocers' Association to make an issue of the matter.



The provision which is causing all the trouble is as follows:—

FUTURE SALES.

Seller and buyer agree that, as they are buying and selling a crop the maturity and harvest of which depends entirely upon the weather of California, that in case of destruction by the elements of one-half or over of the crop, that seller shall be released and this contract null and void; and in case of rain damaging the crop that it shall be the seller's privilege to furnish rain-damaged beans, but same to be recleaned, and sample of quality of such rain-damaged beans to be furnished for approval, with buyer's option to accept or reject such beans before shipment, such rejection to constitute delivery.

The feeling of the jobbers can be seen from a statement made by one of them to this paper during the week:—

"The broker comes to us," he said, "and sells us future beans. It is understood clearly by both parties that what takes place is an actual sale. Later on he brings a long, closely-printed contract for us to sign, and as we have no idea that this can change the terms of sale, we sign it. The crop is short and the market advances. We are told that we won't get very many beans under our contract. We look up the contract and for the first time we find the above clause in it. It seems from that, that if the crop is under 50 per cent., they can cancel the whole thing—needn't deliver any at all. The object of that is to enable them to resell all the beans which they sold us, at the higher prices which will of course rule if the crop is only 50 per cent. Under that clause they can also bring us bad beans, that is rain-damaged beans—they must be recleaned but that might not make them fit for our trade—and we must either take them, or take none, for 'rejection constitutes delivery.' The object of that also is to enable them to force their poorest beans on us and sell the good ones at the higher price. In all my experience I have never known such a one-sided contract. As a matter of fact, it is pretty nearly a fraud on the trade, for its evident object is to enable the bean people to cheat the trade out of their beans and sell them in a higher market."

Can You Doubt That This Would Sell Jar Rings?

This cut shows our display container which sits on your counter and silently sells Good Luck Jar Rings.

For several weeks we have been telling you the story of Good Luck Jar Rings. They can't be retailed for five cents a dozen, but must be sold for ten cents. Nothing but live, new, fresh, resilient rubber goes into them (stretch one) and they will last and last and last—way beyond the cheap jar rings that are made from reclaimed rubber. If you have any left at the end of the season, you can carry them to the next without the slightest loss. Do you know any other jar ring you can do that with ?

No housewife who buys Good Luck Jar Rings will ever come back and complain that bad rings spoiled her canning.

Your jobber has these.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

No. 391.—Another Plan of Preventing the Cancellation of Orders.

Apropos of my recent article on "Cancelling Orders Seen in Two Lights," I have received through a Western paper a copy of the selling contract used by a large Ohio carriage company. Evidently this concern sells its goods through salesmen, and it uses a very elaborate and complicated order blank, containing the specifications of the order, and also a large number of clauses intended to tie the buyer up so he can't cancel. My attention is particularly directed to the following clause:—

If the undersigned purchaser countermands this order, or any part thereof, or causes shipment to be held beyond present season the undersigned purchaser agrees to pay 20 per cent. of the net amount of the goods herein ordered to The American Carriage Co. as liquidated damages.

Of course the purpose of this clause is clear. It is to hold the buyer to his order—prevent cancellation, in other words. The theory is that when a buyer who decides he wants to cancel sees that he will have to pay 20 per cent. of the contract price for the privilege, he may hesitate to do it.

My opinion is asked as to the probable effectiveness of this clause to fulfill the purpose for which it is intended, and the statement is made that it has been tested and upheld in Texas. Undoubtedly it would hold everywhere if it could be proven that the carriage concern actually lost 20 per cent. by the buyer's cancellation. In other words, if that was the real damage, it could be collected anywhere.

I want to explain briefly what "liquidated damages" means. Every reader hereof has signed or seen contracts containing a provision that if one party defaulted, he should pay to the other a certain sum as liquidated damages. "Liquidated damages" means the actual damages sustained through the default, but very often the sum named is way beyond the real damages, and is really put in as a penalty for breaking the contract. The courts will not allow a penalty to be collected in such a case, but will allow the real damages due to the default to be collected. Therefore it is a crafty custom to call whatever sum is put in the contract "liquidated damages," so that it will be upheld. But the courts pay no attention to what name is used, but go straight to the fact, and when somebody breaks a contract or refuses to take an order, the court will confine the other party to proving his actual damages no matter what sum has been named in the contract. He can collect that and nothing more.

As was said by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in deciding a case only last week:—

> The mere use of the terms "penalty," "forfeiture," "liquidated damages," "stipulated damages" is not conclusive as to whether a contract provides for liquidated damages or a penalty. In this case the contract provided that it was not a building contract, but one for the furnishing of materials to be used in performing a building contract. It provided that, should the contractor fail to complete the work by a specified time, he should pay to the owner "liquidated damages" for each and every day thereafter, while the owner should pay to the contractor a bonus of the same amount for each and every day that the work was completed prior to the specified date. There was a delay in the work, and a claim was made for damages at $50 a day. The actual damages only can be collected.
> There are numerous cases in which the law does not enforce contracts according to their literal interpretation. This is true generally of bonds, other than penal ones, which usually provide for a fixed liability upon condition, but upon condition broken the law enforces not the contract according to its literal interpretation, but for the amount of the actual damages.

So that I say again, without doubt this 20 per cent. clause will be upheld everywhere, if the carriage company can prove that it really lost 20 per cent. of every order defaulted upon. If it can't prove that—if in fact the actual loss was much less than that—then the courts of most States would throw the 20 per cent. out and award the carriage company only what it actually lost.

I am asked what I think of this clause as a means of holding customers to their orders. It has a certain effectiveness, but it is not so effective, in my opinion, as the plan of including a clause that "this order (or this contract) is not subject to cancellation." A buyer who signs an order or contract with that clause in it is unquestionably tied up as tightly as he can be, always provided no fraud has been practiced on him.

The Week's Dry Goods Record.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale dry goods distribution for the current week has been running well ahead of the corresponding period of a year ago.

The volume of road orders for immediate delivery has been heavy in response to the more seasonable weather, while road sales for future delivery have been much in excess of the week 1915.

Buyers have attended the market in larger numbers.

Collections are in excess of the same week last year.

A Useful List of Ham and Buyers

Do this for your own good: Make a note of everybody who buys a slice of ham of you in a week. It may tell you how small a percentage of your customers are buying ham, and that in itself is useful information, but mainly use it for this: ask them afterward how they liked it.

If they aren't enthusiastic, we want you to think of Liberty Brand hams, the sweetest, tenderest, juicest ham on the market, packed by us with our own cure.

Send for one Liberty Brand ham and test it out.

Messrs. D. Shipps & Son, Bordentown, N. J., send me a couple of 6-inch single column newspaper advertisements recently used by them, I judge in local papers. One is from a paper printed on good quality white paper, and the other is apparently from a paper printed on poor grey stock. The difference in the appearance of the two advertisements is remarkable, due entirely to the difference in the quality of the paper used.

I am reproducing both advertisements here, about the original size:—

Maple Syrup—Direct shipment from Vermont. Pure Sap Syrup, 50c. quart.

Hawaiian Pineapple—Paradise Island brand, best packed. Extra large tins, 20c., the regular 25c. size.

D. Shipps & Son.

Of these two advertisements, the one with the coupon at the head is the better set because it shows the price in boldface type, and in the right place—at the end of the paragraph. The other advertisement sets it in boldface too, but sticks it in the body of the paragraph. The effect is not so clean cut. Still, both advertisements are good, and I would expect them to sell goods. From what I can see of the clippings sent, they were both next to reading matter, and undoubtedly were seen. I would suggest some slight changes in the method of display, however. I should not separate the paragraphs with rules that go completely across the advertisement. That kind of rule is used to separate the advertisements of different advertisers, and to use it in the body of an advertisement is confusing. I should use rules only half as wide. Then I should put a border around the advertisement so as to make it even more conspicuous than it was. With a narrow border around this advertisement would stand out of the page a great deal better. This style of display is always good from the standpoint of conspicuousness on a newspaper page.

The text of this advertising is good—terse, snappy, well written and comprehensive. It really condenses the meat of the offering in a few words. I don't understand why some goods are priced and some are not. Price everything you possibly can.

Government Will Learn Whether Storage Warehouses Choke With Food While Price Soars.

Daily newspapers everywhere have published the charge during the week that warehouses and cold storage plants in Chicago and the surrounding country are so jammed with food products of all kinds that many are unable to accept more for storage, but, despite this fact, the price of all food commodities is steadily climbing higher. This was the gist of a report being prepared by United States officials to be forwarded to Washington. The report is the most comprehensive statement of actual food conditions in America which ever has been prepared, according to officials in charge of the investigation. The conditions revealed, it is expected, may be the basis of Grand Jury action charge being conspiracy to co the supply of food and prices. vestigation is being made by legal departments here and Washington to determine wh a violation of the Sherman Trust law is involved. Later eral agents seized the books o large cold storage warehouse panies for use in the investig into the high cost of living. records were taken to the offi the United States District A ney and will be given to the eral Grand Jury, which meets day. The Federal Trade Com sion announced during the that it would make no investig into the high cost of living.

Some Wise Hints on Keeping Ca Goods.

How losses in canned foods be curbed are told by a We jobbing house as follows:—

Pile the case on their side that the cans will be lying do and not standing up.

Do not put canned goods a dirt floor nor less than inches away from wall.

If your cellar has a dirt flo build a platform at least inches from the floor on wh to store goods.

The contents of cans lyi down hit both ends of the t leaving no air space to ca swells or springers. When ca are lying on their side the space is on the side, and n body ever saw a can swell the side.

Damp, dirt cellars ca rusty cans.

When a leaky can is disco ered, get it out of the ca quick, as it may destroy a doz others.

Occasionally open a case two and see how goods a keeping.

It is declared that the practi storing cases so that the can on the side will not only re swells and springers, but lesse liability of rust damage, by ma it more difficult for moisture t main on the outside of the can is also claimed that springers return to normal shape if pl under refrigeration.

How Long Would You Stand a Jobber's Salesman Who Did This?

Would you give an order to a jobber's salesman who couldn't promise you that it would ever be delivered?

You certainly would not.

Then why do you give a specialty order to a specialty salesman who can't promise when it will be delivered or that it will ever be delivered? You do that every time you sign an unstamped specialty order, for the jobber has a way of paying but little attention to unstamped orders. The salesman who takes such an order will try to get it delivered, of course, but he never knows if he will succeed.

Jobbers handle stamped specialty orders exactly as they handle their own—promptly and precisely—because stamped specialty orders are guaranteed by the manufacturers.

There are consumers who suspect retailers that try not to sell nationally advertised goods. Sometimes that suspicion is unfair to the retailer, but it exists notwithstanding.

The point is that there is a large body of opinion that advertised goods are good and to be preferred. The dealer who sets himself against that is cutting himself on a weapon that he might use to his own great advantage.

VOL. LXII. PHILADELPHIA, December 4, 1916. No. 23

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" hopes that every reader had as good a Thanksgiving as he deserved, and that those who had less to be thankful for than they thought they should have, will try to see that they have more next year.

An Interesting Case Involving the Cancellation of a Future Contract, Discussed Because It Is Typical of Many Others This Season.

Good Codfish Is Scarce This Year

¶ Be sure that you don't sell your trade a fish which is either a poor codfish or no cod at all.

¶ Gorton's Codfish is this year exactly what it has always been—the finest codfish packed. It will sell for a little more money than it has in previous years, but it is worth every cent of it. And compared with other food products, it's still a very cheap food.

This Tells the Tale

¶ A product which has been or the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test o time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

Isn't This Pretty Shabby Treatment by a Catsup Packer?

Although He Admits Having Packed Some Goods, He Cancels a Retailer's Order for One Hundred and Fifty Cases, Sold Under Future Contract. A Most Interesting Case, Tending to Show That Future Contracts Desert Us When We Most Need Them.

The fact that this year will witness the shortest deliveries in canned goods and bottled goods on record will make the following case of no delivery under a future contract generally interesting:—

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.,
Nov. 22, 1916.

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World," Philadelphia, Pa.

Gentlemen:—

We are enclosing herewith a contract and the correspondence we had with the manufacturer and jobber, which are self-explanatory. Will you kindly advise us if we can hold them to their contract, or at least part of it?

Kindly return the contract and letter to us.

If you wish to publish this in your paper, kindly withhold our name.

Thanking you in advance for your advice, we are,

Respectfully yours,

* * * *.

The order was on a regular order blank of Granger & Co., wholesale grocers of Buffalo, N. Y., and was taken by their salesman, N. J. Wais, under date of January 13, 1916. It called for "150 c/24 stick table catsup at 75 cents. In club car or 77½. Fall del. Pro rata. Goods to be same as in American Maid label catsup under private label."

This correspondent sends a batch of correspondence that figures in the case. The packers of this catsup was the Paul DeLaney Co., of Brocton, N. Y., who got in the deal under date of May 29th last, by a letter to the correspondent, asking when the private labels for the order would be furnished.

Then came a letter from the DeLaney Co. dated July 18th, asking some more questions about labels.

Next came a letter dated September 11th, telling of the lateness of the tomato pack, and stating that "the order you have booked with us will be handled in the most prompt and satisfactory manner possible."

Next was a letter dated October 1st, reporting bad conditions of the tomato crop, and stating that "the good weather has come too late to permit of our making greater than 50 to 60 per cent. delivery."

Finally was a letter dated November 1, 1916, cancelling the order entirely. It is interesting enough to reproduce:—

Brocton, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1916.

Letter No. 3.

We realized early last spring that owing to the cold, wet weather through this section of the country, there must necessarily be a curtailed yield of tomatoes. We accordingly tripled our acreage, thereby protecting ourselves with a greater quantity of tomatoes than we could possibly have used had even half a crop been grown.

As the summer advanced, the prospects were better and we felt that while the tomatoes would be late in maturing (as notified you in our letter of September 11th) we would still be able to make full delivery on all orders.

Through the month of September we had cold, wet rains all through this section and we knew (as written you October 1st) that we could not make greater than 50 to 60 per cent. delivery on our catsup orders.

Through October it rained; the days were fairly warm but the nights were cold; consequently the tomatoes grew but did not ripen. To-day there are vast fields of tomatoes in this district, untouched by frost, but green. We have hoped against hope for one week of sunshine, which would have enabled us to deliver some catsup on your contract. It is now too late in the season to figure on any receipts, as a frost is apt to destroy every tomato in the district any night.

The thought may suggest itself to you that we are holding catsup for a higher price, owing to the fact that all manufacturers are making short delivery. Such is not the case. We haven't a gallon of catsup in the house.

Please realize that we have on hand all the material with which to make catsup—except the one essential—tomatoes; we have the bottles, caps, labels and boxes to take care of your order; is this non-delivery more of a handicap to you than to us?

Regretting the fact that we are compelled to cancel your order, we are,

Yours very truly,
THE PAUL DELANEY CO., INC.

This seemed like pretty shabby treatment, and the correspondent then wrote to Granger & Co., who had taken the order. The latter firm said they had nothing to do with it; "our representative, Mr. Wais, did handle this account as a side line, but we had nothing to do with the filling of the contracts."

This was the state of the case when the correspondent sent the case to us. We have advised him as follows:—

Originally this order seems to have been taken by Granger & Co., wholesale grocers of Buffalo. Their salesman obtained it and it was booked on a Granger blank, evidently by the consent of Granger & Co. This being true, I believe that you could have held the Granger people to the order had you stood upon the fact continuously that you were dealing with Granger & Co. and had not given the order to the packers. Apparently, however, you did not take that attitude, for the DeLaney Co. started to write you letters about the order on May 29, 1916, and instead of answering that you did not know them in the transaction but had dealt with Granger & Co., you apparently accepted their letters and perhaps answered some of them. This being true, I am of the opinion that you recognized the DeLaney Co. as the real seller of the catsup, and whatever action you have must be against them.

The contract is a flat order for 150 cases of catsup at a certain price "fall delivery pro rata." Under the custom of the trade "pro rata" would mean in this case your share of the packer's total production if he packed less than enough to deliver 100 per cent. of all his orders. And if he packed none on account of conditions beyond his control, my judgment is he could entirely cancel the order, but in order to enable him to cancel it in t he would have to show that had packed none whatever. is quite evident from the lett sent you by the Paul DeLa Co. that they did pack so catsup, for they wrote un date of October 1, 1916, t some tomatoes had been ceived and that they wo probably deliver 50 or 60 cent. My judgment is that t are required by their contr to deliver some catsup to if they packed some. It is conceivable that they w through the season with packing any catsup at all, if they did pack any they required by the order wh they accepted to deliver " rata."

This paper supplements above by the remark that the looks as if the DeLaney co had treated this correspondent- doubtless many other buyers very shabbily indeed. And w lieve illegally.

This case is discussed at l because it is typical of a large ber of others this year.

About "Melon-Cutting," Etc.

Every Progressive Merchant Recognizes Changes in METHODS, GOODS, ADVERTISING, ARGUMENTS

The writer's Breakfast Table has been supplied for the last two months almost daily with charming melons of the varieties known as Mountain Dew, ıta Claus and Casaba. During all that time not one unsatisfactory melon has been served. How came this about?

A Progressive Firm of Fruiterers, whose Store display is a picture and a dream, attracting every eye, and winning old and new customers from the sers by, has made a Specialty of these Breakfast Melons. One of the partners is a connoisseur; every melon going out to his trade passes through hands. He sends nothing that will not give satisfaction. If melons are "Punky" or "Over-ripe," into the waste barrel they go. "How long can you p up this supply?" said the Housekeeper to him. "Oh, for some weeks yet," he replied. "We have selected stock in Cold Storage that will last our nds until Christmas." Was that enterprising, self-respecting, true merchandising?

A lady friend from Connecticut, visiting us last week, exclaimed with pleasure over the "Mountain Dew" that was served that morning. She l: "Why, where do you get these? None of our Markets offer anything like this now." Yet she was in a Town of 8,000 or 10,000 inhabitants, a large portion of whom would cheerfully have paid for these delicacies. Were the Grocers and Marketmen dead slow? Why did not one of them make ead on Mountain Dews, Casabas and Santa Claus Melons and let everybody know what he could give them? Would not the tide of trade come straight ıis store? Is not that good merchandising, enterprising and winsome? The fact is, every Merchant who would succeed now cannot follow the lead the Price-cutting Swash-bucklers. He would better close up to-day and save all he can out of the wreck. But Fine Food Qualities, takingly displayed persistently talked up, with his trade, will give him the lead still.

A Firm of Good Merchants said to us: "We had to give up Hams and Bacon three or four years ago. There was nothing in it, so we pulled ." But suppose the House should take up now "The Winter Melon Trump Card," tying to the Ferris Famous Hams and Boneless Breakfast Bacon, ing them, pushing them, AND FINDING THEM A NEW ATTRACTION against the world of cheap, cut-priced Meats, which average just that ality also. There are still hundreds of good Housewives who will pay the price for an unusually good thing and say "Thank you, Mam," besides. takes the Melon kind of a Merchant, however, to do it, but there are hundreds of that class when once they stop to think, and then ACT!

One of our Representatives sends this report: "Mr. L. was out of Town. His End Man told me that our goods were everything I had told him. said a Customer of theirs came in one day and seeing a Ferris Ham hanging said he thought no one in K——— sold them so he had been sending to w York for them. The End Man asked his opinion of the cure and he said he had not come across a Ham yet that could touch it in quality or flavor.

One of our Department Store Restaurants buys the best for its daily patrons. That means Ferris Hams and Bacon. Our Representative was ing his Lunch there the other noon and a gentleman and lady were sitting at the next table. The gentleman called the Manager and asked whose on he was serving there. The Manager looked at our Representative with a smile and told them it was "The Ferris Bacon." After the people left he ıe over and wanted to know what our Representative had paid them to come and do that trick.

FROM A LEADING SOUTHERN MERCHANT!

"Ship me a Barrel. They are repeating on Ferris Hams."

FROM A BRISK NEW ENGLAND STORE!

"Mr. ——— ———, head of the concern, received me courteously; I very seldom see him as he is an exceedingly busy man. They are our old al customers, handling a case of Bacon every week. He gave me his Order this time for the Bacon, then he said, "By the way, Mr. Reilly, I want a m." "One Ham?" I asked? He said, "You know that's for my own use—THE ONLY HAM I DARE BRING HOME."

Will you try the "Melon Act?"

and unjustifiable statements have been made with reference to the responsibilities of the farmer in regard to the matter.

The high price of farm products is due to several causes. Some of the more important ones are: The climatic conditions of this country during the last year were, perhaps, one of the leading causes of crop shortage. A long, cold, wet spring, followed by a very hot, dry weather, extending over a larger area of country than is usually the case, reduced acreage and yield to a more marked degree than has been the case for any previous year. For example, the wheat in the northwest was a crop failure; the corn crop was in many sections a partial failure, as well as the potato and vegetable crops.

It must be borne in mind that the high prices have struck the farmer in whatever he buys as much as they have the city consumer. Farm labor is scarcer and higher than ever before in this country. Everything the farmer buys, whether machinery, fertilizer, fencing, clothing or the necessaries of life, has increased in price by leaps and bounds. This is also true of taxation, the increase being in many sections 50 per cent. or more during the last five years.

In former days everything the farmer needed was produced on his farm or in his immediate neighborhood. This is all changed, and the farmer of to-day is the largest consumer of manufactured products, even in too many cases buying his meats and flour.

Our city cousins have changed their method of living quite as much as we have. Instead of buying in quantities, as formerly, they live in cramped quarters, with a kitchenette six by eight, and buy in very small quantities or live out of cartons and cans, and in many cases with little regard to home economies. With this can be coupled expensive methods of distribution, which is not the fault of the farmer.

The fact that nearly one-half of the civilized world has left the field of production and entered upon the work of destruction has increased the demand for all kinds of products and goods. We believe that prices will be high for several years, especially for manufactured goods.

As to the products of the farm, the fixing of prices is mainly by the law of supply and demand in the markets of the world. The farmer competes with the cheapest p labor on earth. When he s some of his products as he only a few years ago, at l than cost, he gets no redress, reduction in taxes nor in a thing he buys; and it would very unfair when he is getti a fair price for some of products to place an emba on what he produces to lo the price and ultimately red the supply.

Other causes might be enu erated thus:—

The alarming increase of sect and fungus pests.

Gambling in food pr ucts, which should be p hibited.

There should be more st age houses in the country under the control of the fa ers themselves.

The duplication in deliv service in the village, town city; also the lack of mark ing facilities in some towns cities.

The American farmer farming as well as he afford. He will increase yields as he gets pay for creased production. Increa production means increa cost, and unless prices w rant this increase the far cannot go ahead.

With the high prices r prevailing many farmers getting no returns for t labor. With the increased velopment of scientific kn edge turned over to the far through agricultural colle experiment stations and ticularly the work done by National Department of A culture, with other agencies can assure the American c sumer that the farmer America if given a fair cha and a square deal will not continue to feed America will have some to spare.

he local papers here are feeding r subscribers full of matter re- ling the high price of food prod- and are giving them what es for advice as to the best way uy under the present critical lition of the markets. For ex- le, the New York "World" last day gave the following advice housewives as to how to buy nksgiving necessities:—

Don't order your turkey "in dvance." There is turkey nough to go around, but the armer wants 35 cents a pound ight now, which means about 5 cents at retail. This for best rades of "turk." Let him vait! Let the dealer wait! Don't rush your orders in.

Meantime, there will be plendid roasting pigs to con- ider, at only 28 cents a pound, veighing from ten up to twenty ounds each.

Beef tongues (corned) will e 22 cents a pound, or (smoked), 27 cents a pound, nd weighs about four to six ounds each. Hams, smoked, t 22 cents, in sizes of twelve o fourteen pounds each, should never mean a retail price of 34 cents.

Chickens, for soup, average about 16 cents a pound, those for roasting at 25 cents a pound, while all the accompaniments are not so out of reach as one imagines, if selection is made with care and the buying done correctly.

Don't forget that the white onions, for table use, are cheapest.

Don't allow the dealer to overcharge on celery; there is plenty and of excellent quality.

Don't pass the cranberry by; it is one of the cheapest products in market, a new kind also from Florida. This fruit stands for health.

Don't use cocoanut; it is extravagance.

Don't go heavily into nuts; they are costly—all but peanuts.

Don't omit the sweet cider. It is healthful and cheap. But don't get the "imitation" stuff. Ask for "Russet cider," at only 25 cents per gallon, the "sweet" at 20 cents.

Do get macaroni, to help out potatoes; the boxes of macaroni are all domestic make, prices for goods $1.75 to $2 per 22-pound box.

Do use dried favor beans (7 cents a pound) instead of dried white at 15 cents.

Do use dried limas at 7 cents a pound, not canned at 15 cents a small can.

Do use Malaga grapes; they are abundant; prices $2.50 to $5 for a keg of 42 and 45 pounds. This means 6 to 8 cents a pound, not any 25 cents a pound at retail.

Do use the "chic" peas at only 9 cents a pound (dried), which make such tasty soups and odd kinds of dishes. This saves on canned peas at 18 cents a can.

Do use apples; they are only $2 for the ordinary kinds and $5 for fancy grades (per barrel). Beautiful Spitzenbergs, ranging 56 per box, are only $2.50, or about 4½ cents each, which will become 12 cents each, at single retail rate. The "delicious" apple, $2.25 for 113. Gravenstein's at $2 a box. These all make a fine table fruit. Any large family, or couple of smaller families can use these to great advantage.

Do use mincemeat; it's healthful and not expensive; in 30-pound pails at 9½ cents a pound. The baker's pie will cost you about 75 cents this season.

Do use pumpkin. One egg per quart of milk make a very decent pie, molasses for sweetening. It will cost about 25 cents against 60 cents from a store.

The feature of this week has been the widespread movement to boycott eggs. There is in New York State a Mayors' Association which is composed of the Mayors of many of the cities. This association has been primarily active in featuring the boycott and in working in the different communities through its members. Some of the local Mayors issued proclamations to the people urging them not to use eggs for the next two weeks. Weights and Measures Commissioner Hartigan, of New York City, is also very active and has issued a plea to the housewives of the city. He says that if the boycott against eggs is successful he will suggest that it be extended to butter, potatoes, poultry and other things.

Naturally the holders of eggs are predicting the usual disaster which they always seem to see when a boycott is spoken of. F. F. Droste, of Droste & Snyder, 177 Duane street, states that if the boycott was successful and the price dropped it would leave consumers worse off than they were before, because England stands ready to buy eggs in unlimited quantities as soon as the price drops two or three cents a dozen.

The Wicks Legislative Committee sat in the offices of the Merchants' Association during the week to hear testimony about the egg situation. One particular incident brought out before the committee was interesting. It concerned a carload of eggs bought in Decatur, Indiana last June for 24½ cents a dozen and placed in cold storage. During the same month they were sold to a Brooklyn jobbing house for 25½ cents. In the following September the original seller bought them back at 29 cents and on the same day resold them for 30 cents. They were then sold again to a middleman at 32 cents, and these identical eggs on November 18th were sold to consumers at 43 cents a dozen. Most of those who profited by the advances were the egg brokers.

Cash or Credit ?

¶ A certain class of customers will buy just as long as you will extend them credit. When forced to pay cash, they will buy elsewhere rather than face you with their account unpaid.

¶ Right now, there are probably on your books the names of many such customers who are getting ready to "turn that trick."

¶ Cut out that "credit" trade. Give your customers a reason for paying cash and you will hold all their trade.

¶ For over 20 years millions of thrifty shoppers have taken their trade to the fair-minded merchants who give S.H. Green Stamps as a discount for cash patronage.

¶ Nowadays, you cannot afford to let any customers get away; certainly not, if they owe you money. Look at your books and see where you stand on this important matter.

WITH THE EDITOR

Another Newspaper Ignoramus.

A good friend of this paper, M. J. Haile, of Shamokin, Pa., who besides being a substantial business man is a director in the Shamokin Trust and Safe Deposit Co., sends in this editorial which the "Shamokin Dispatch" published during the week:—

> The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" may be an honest and respectable publication, but a piece of advice it gave its merchant readers lately seems flagrantly immoral.
> "Consumers are being educated daily," it remarked, "by a variety of conditions, to pay good prices for everything they buy. The retail merchant who doesn't take advantage of that had better drop out. Never again will he have such a chance."
> In other words, grab while the grabbing's good! People are getting used to high prices, and rather expect them, even while they complain—so soak them to the limit. Charge "all the traffic will bear" for everything. If a rise in the wholesale price of butter forces the raising of the retail price 5 cents a pound, raise eggs, too, even if they cost the same as before. If flour goes up legitimately, raise cornmeal and peas and beans along with it. If potatoes double in price, owing to a real scarcity, add a dollar a bushel to apples, no matter what they're worth. High prices are in the air. Take advantage of the psychology of the thing; encourage the consumer's belief that "everything's going up," and soak him! He probably will never know the difference.
> Perhaps that is why the price of so many commodities has risen to unprecedented heights. Of course no retailers in Shamokin are acting on that greedy and vicious principle!

Here goes another ignoramus off on a tangent. The "Dispatch" interprets the advice it objects to in the light of its own dense ignorance of the retail business. Like all consumers it apparently considers it "flagrantly immoral" for a retailer to make any profit whatever. He should sell at cost and the Lord will provide! Of course all that muck about grabbing while the grabbing is good is nothing but the "Dispatch's" fevered imagination. This paper has never advised its readers to do any such thing, nor would it do so. I explain again the meaning of the advice to which so many newspapers have objected, which meaning, I say again, was clearly understood by everybody in trade, for whom only it was written. The meaning was this: that retailers should use present conditions to make the adjustment of their profits which is never possible except in a period of fluctuating markets.

The "P. S." of Mr. Haile's letter is interesting. He says: "We are retailing many kinds of goods, especially canned goods, cheaper than we can buy them now. Goods that we put in stock from one to three months ago." Therefore I am very sure that Mr. Haile and other merchants like them did not misunderstand what this paper said to them. That being true, the Shamokin "Dispatch" can go hang.

No Conspiracy Exists.

Nowadays the papers are full of talk about conspiracy to raise the prices of foodstuffs. Sometimes manufacturers are accused, sometimes jobbers, sometimes retailers. "Conspiracy" sounds good to consumers and so the newspapers play it up. The Government is even hunting in Chicago and some other places for evidences of conspiracy, but it will not find any, because no conspiracy exists.

Conspiracy means an agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful thing, or to do a lawful thing in an unlawful way. An agreement. The mere doing of the same thing at the same time by two or more persons is not conspiracy. When the holders of eggs, for example, numbering several thousands, every one in touch with the market, all see that prices will stand an advance, why should they agree to make the advance, when they can make it just as well without agreeing to, and reap the same reward legally? Of course there is no conspiracy. The fact is that a lot of people, all with the same axe to grind, have taken advantage of the same situation at the same time. But to make that criminal the law will have to be changed. It certainly is not criminal now.

The Food Embargo.

One of the big subjects at the coming session of Congress will be the proposed embargo on American food products. As readers hereof know, our exports of food products, notably wheat, have been enormous and unprecedented. So much has gone abroad that the way has been opened to enormous advances on this side, and Americans are now paying more for many foods than they have ever paid before.

An embargo would of course forbid the export of American food products, and would inevitably reduce prices on this side. In place of scarcity would come extreme plenty, and markets in most food lines would decline over night.

Those who want an embargo argue that we should consider our own people first. Particularly our own poor. And while we owe a certain charity to the people of the warring countries, charity should begin at home. We have no business to grind the faces of the poor of this country merely to do a good turn to foreigners.

Those who oppose an embargo take perhaps the broader and more generous view that to refuse to sell food to foreigners who would starve without it, would be a crime. That the people of some of the European countries have nowhere to go for food than to the United States. If they can't get food here they can't get it at all. It is a very pretty argument. The President is opposed to an embargo, and will throw the whole force of the administration against it.

Personally, I believe that a very good compromise would be a limited embargo. Don't shut off all the food exports, but shut off say one-half. In such a crisis we have no right to decide wholly in favor of the people of this country or wholly in favor of the foreigners. At present we are deciding wholly in favor of the foreigners, because we are selling them all of our food they want without regard to what pens to us.

There is something else whi will relieve me to say. My own lief is that if we were to shu the food, the war would quickly come to an end. If that be done, it might pay to starve s people to do it. Isn't it worth w to starve a few thousand, if a lion can be saved from shooting

A Boycott as a Remedy for High Prices.

The New York food authori according to this week's New Y letter, are tr to reduce prices of egg instituting a certed boycott. Literature is b sent out, newspapers doing t share, and the Mayors of var New York cities are working their own communities. The p ciple involved is of course very ple: Eggs are highly perish and their period of life has l further shortened by cold sto food laws. The market is gove entirely by the every day dem and if that stops even if for twe four hours, stocks will pile up the market will break of its weight.

There is no flaw in this the The result is bound to be preci what the boycotters expect it to if the cause can be set in mot The trouble is to set the caus motion. Never once in my exp ence has there been a succes concerted boycott of a food pr uct. Of course many times w something got too high, pe stopped using it here and there, that isn't a boycott. A boycott curs when a large number of peo acting together, declare that t will stop using a given thing the time being. That has ne been done in any material deg in my recollection.

But there has never been a ti when it could not have been don if enough people could be indu to stand together. They wh and complain about high prices, very few have the courage to s using an article until the pr comes down again.

There is absolutely no reason w the price of anything should be

Supply and demand make it aided often by manipulation, s soon as the demand stops the will inevitably decline. Nothan prevent it. The people have remedy for high prices easily in their grasp at all times, for is nothing in the way of purable merchandise which they ot do without. The trouble them always is that at the first of high prices, they rush in and their heads off. Nine times out n they put up the price on iselves.

teran Retailer Tells of Salesmen That Have Called on Him in Thirty Years des All Salesmen Into Seven Classes. Crooked Salesmen All Dig Their Own Graves. Personality a Salesman's Chief Asset. Honesty the One Quality Without Which a Salesman Cannot Succeed.

e been in the retail business for y thirty years and during that I've seen, I suppose, thousands aveling salesmen, yet I've never n the least bit tired of having come and watching them . They're a very interesting f boys to me—good fellows igh and through, as a rule. I seen a few crooked sticks float , but they soon went under. I never known that to fail—a ked salesman invariably digs vn grave. He can be rude, and nannered, and untidy, and pro- and vulgar, but if he's straight knows his business, he'll get . Let him be crooked and he's sooner or later.

l the salesmen I've ever known divide into seven types:—

The salesman that doesn't care t whether you like him person- so long as you believe him.

The salesman that works first ıardest to make you like him, ving that if he can make you ım he can do anything with

The salesman that thinks the weapon he needs is flattery.

The salesman who never s you his lowest price at first, ugh he knows you know per- well that is his habit.

The salesman that you abso- know is telling you the truth last and all the time.

The salesman who you can s telling you the truth when 's no very important reason he shouldn't.

The salesman that you feel will 's take advantage of you, by or act, whenever there is any- to gain by it.

s interesting to see the young vs come in who, being new, devised a regular selling sys- for themselves. You can al- see the book on "Salesman- bulging out their breast pock-

e chap like this came in to me ear selling shoes for a Boston house. He was a good-looking boy, but as raw as an onion. He has a regular set form for approaching customers that I knew right away he had gotten out of some correspondence course, or a book. It didn't fit him any more than a 32-coat would—he was a big chap—and I finally said:—

"See here, old man, if you can talk straight English to me, I'll be glad to listen to you, but don't give me any more of that made up stuff."

He got red and then laughed, and in the minute we were down to brass tacks. He sells me goods to-day, but not by the book method.

After a pretty long experience seeing these fellows and hearing them talk, I'm prepared to say this: That seventy-five per cent. of a salesman's stock in trade is his own personality. I don't mean fine features, or good clothes, or curly hair, or anything like that, but that something or other that gets across—that makes you like to have a chap come in and makes you trust him. I've found it many a time under a suit of clothes with soup stains all over the front; and I've found it in a man with the worst hare-lip I ever saw.

It's only once in a great while that a house has something so unusual that it sells itself. Nowadays one man's stock is pretty much like another man's. It's the personality of the salesman that makes one offering better than another, and between the thousands of competitive offerings that are made to every merchant in a year, there often isn't a mite between them but the differing personality of the salesman.

I know a salesman who has been on the road for forty years. He was an old road man when I first opened my store. This man—call him Tom—has more customers that stick to him than any salesman I know except one. Yet he almost never gives them a civil word. He always has a grouch.

The Week's Dry Goods Record.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale shipments of dry goods for the current week have been in excess of the corresponding period of a year ago.

Road orders for both immediate and future delivery are running in larger volume than for the same week of 1915.

Customers have visited the market in larger numbers.

Collections show an increase over the same period last year.

Prices are firm.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

The man who writes the Ferris ad. this week tells a story about some Mountain Dew melons that he bought. He had 'em almost every day for two months and didn't get a bad one once. That's going some, eh what? What's it got to do with Ferris Hams and Bacon? I'll tell you. Don't you see what that did for the chap that sold those melons? The Ferris people are so tickled about it that they take him into their ad. And I'll gamble they talked to everybody about it that would listen. Can a grocer buy an ad. like that? He sure cannot. And it's the same when you sell Ferris Hams and Bacon. You can sell them for two months, too, without a complaint, and doing that will do the same for you that it did for the chap that sold the melons. Read the ad. and you'll get the point right off. JIMMY MANDER.

For the Serious Consideration of all Retail Grocers

From various sources of information we learn that at this winter's session of the Legislature, in several States, bills may be offered which would seriously affect all methods of premium-giving. In fact, if such bills were to be passed, all manufacturers packing their own coupons and giving their own premiums would be prevented from employing this method of advertising.

We do not believe the retail grocers wish or have any intention of endorsing bills of this kind and we ask that you carefully consider any proposed legislation before endorsing a bill which would prevent the manufacturer from offering his own coupons.

A premium coupon packed by the manufacturer and redeemed by the manufacturer direct from the consumer costs the retailer nothing. It causes him no annoyance but helps him sell goods, as the coupons are of intrinsic value to the consumer.

There are different methods of premium-giving and it would be a detriment to your business, unjust to your customers and unfair to the manufacturer to have bills passed which, while intended only to affect certain methods, would prohibit all branches of this great profit-sharing mode of advertising.

Therefore, be sure you thoroughly understand the real issues before endorsing any anti-coupon measure

The Grocery Markets

Sugar.

The raw market has rather gone to pieces during the week, due mainly to the lack of demand on the part of refiners. Sales of raws have been made as low as 5⅝, which is a decline of about ½ cent during the week. There seems to be no reason for the drop in raws except the lack of demand, for the season in Cuba is backward on account of rains. Some sugar is coming forward from Louisiana. Refined sugar shows no change for the week. There is now a very heavy margin between raw and refined and ordinarily refined would decline, but just now the refiners are working on higher priced raws and probably will not drop their prices until they go on cheap sugar. It is easily possible just now to buy refined sugar for less than refiners' prices, as second hands holders are selling at about 25 points under the regular market. Consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, but all values are steady to firm. The feeling in all black teas appears to be stronger than a week ago, due mainly to scarcity. Green teas are even scarcer relatively than blacks, but at present are not in very much demand. The whole situation is very strong and the demand continues active from day to day.

Coffee.

The coffee market remains unchanged for the week, but the undertone is undeniably soft, owing, in the case of Rio and Santos, to the very large available supply in this country. Prices show no change for the week and there is no indication of any immediate further decline. The demand is very light. Milds are all unchanged and quiet. Java and Mocha unchanged and in moderate demand.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is still very high, being several cents above normal. Demand is fair. Sugar syrup shows no change but the entire situation is very scarce and high. Molasses has declined about 4 cents from the opening price but is still comparatively high when compared with the prices which ruled for old crop molasses.

Fish.

The only change in the mackerel situation is an advance in the price of Irish mackerel, which are at least $1 per barrel higher on account of scarcity. Other mackerel are unchanged and scarce. Cod, hake and haddock are still scarce and high. Salmon is in good demand at fully maintained prices. The sardine packing season closes to-morrow with practically no surplus in the hands of the packers. Prices should go considerably higher before the new pack.

Dried Fruits.

Peaches and apricots unchanged; demand fair. Raisins are in active demand at prices fully maintai Other dried fruits unchanged.

Canned Goods.

Owing to lack of demand the mato market has receded abou cents a dozen. The supplies in hands are exeremely limited but demand is more so. Peas and are in fair demand at unchar prices. California canned goods more closely cleaned up on the than for several years past. principal trading is from one jo to another. In Baltimore ca goods, spinach has taken ano advance of 10 to 15 cents in the week. The pack is light and supply limited.

Butter.

The market on butter for the week has remained statio There is a fair consumptive den and the market is steady at changed prices. We are not li to experience any change in near future.

Eggs.

The receipts of new laid continue to be light and the m is firm with prices ranging the as a week ago, with a consum demand that absorbs the receip

Where the Coffee Peddler Falls Down

No coffee peddler can sell a careful consumer who wants coffee rather than premiums very long, because his qualities vary almost from week to week, and the customer never knows where he is.

That is, the coffee peddler can't sell him—if there is any retailer in the neighborhood to do better than the peddler. No coffee peddler can compete for a minute with a grocer who features Harisco Standardized Coffees, for he has something to offer that the peddler can never have, i. e., coffee to adopt and go forward on permanently.

Harisco Standardized Coffees are blends and grades that are made superfine in the beginning and kept absolutely uniform by the most enormous care in buying.

We would appreciate a friendly letter from you on your Coffee Department.

verything in the smoked meat remains steady at unchanged es, with a light consumptive.de- d. Pure lard is steady with a consumptive demand at about ent decline, while compound is with a good demand at un- ged prices. Barreled pork, ıed meats and dried beef are in nal demand, prices ranging same as last week.

Poultry.

IVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Sugar.

Refined Sugar.—The market con- ues unchanged. All refiners will sell basis 7.50 except McCahan and Pennsylvania, who will sell basis 7.45. The market looks weak with indications of lower prices. While the margin between raw sugars at 5.64 and refined at 7.45 to 7.50 less 2 per cent. is 166 to 171 points, the amount of raw sugars sold at the decline is very small and refiners are still melting raw sugars which cost them considerably above present spot quotations. Most refiners are in position to handle shipments promptly. Franklin can ship within a few days according to assortment. Pennsylvania can ship promptly. McCahan can ship immediately. New business is fair and really showing a slight improvement, brought about by previous contracts becoming exhausted. The trade, however, are all buying from hand to mouth only, which is the best course to pursue for the present.

Raw Sugar.—The market has ruled very quiet with no sales of Cuba sugars reported to-day. One transaction was reported of 50,000 bags of Louisiana refining grades at 5.25 f. o. b. New Orleans, for delivery within two weeks to the American. The market recently has been affected by various lots of unsold Cuban sugars arriving on an unwilling market and holders preferred to allow concessions rather than place sugars in store. Stocks of raw sugars, both in the United States and Cuba, are becoming very small and growing smaller each week, and from present indications it really would appear as if old crop sugars would be completely exhausted before new crop sugars are available. Weather conditions are interfering with the commencing of harvesting and grinding will be very much delayed this season. The market closes very quiet in all positions.

Rice.

There is more inquiry than is usual at this period of the year, and buyers are quietly picking up desirable parcels and laying them aside against future requirements. This refers more especially to the Honduras sorts, which are apparently in lighter supply, and therefore the market holds firm. Some of the operators are disposed to speculate in the better grades of Blue Rose, having confidence that prices on this style will move upward sharply and shortly after the turn of the year. Holders are feeding the market sparingly and there is no pressure to sell, which keeps the situation taut.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic Coast report the local demand as holding up to last week, but on account of the approaching holidays this section anticipates a falling off in the demand.

At New Orleans in the market for clean the demand can be termed

A Letter to the Groceryman.

Everybody being out, and Bobbie and Dorothy having taken possession of their father's office, Bobbie proceeds to do business.

"You're my st'nogofer, he says to Dorothy. "Take this dictation." And Dorothy, at the typewriter, takes this letter:

"Mr. Groceryman: Send me and Dor two packages of Strawberry and two packages of Orange Jell-O and two packages of Raspberry Jell-O, and send real Jell-O and not that other kind."

That is a businesslike letter and it shows, for one thing, that Bobbie knows what he wants—"real Jell-O"—and doesn't want to take chances with anything else instead, as some older people do.

Jell-O is always put up in packages bearing the word JELL-O in big red letters on the front.

The grocer who sells Jell-O certainly has a chance to turn his Jell-O customers into very profitable customers, if the old saying is true that "A pleased customer is a good customer."

Stores That Look Like Junk Shops

No matter how hard you try to avoid it, your store will look like a junk shop if its shelves are overcrowded.

Of course you can overcrowd shelves supported by Baines' Brackets, but you won't reach the crowded point until you've got 25 per cent. more goods on the shelves than you can put on the old-fashioned shelves.

Baines' Brackets hold up shelves without the old-time uprights that eat up space. The whole, unobstructed shelf-length is available for goods. We've figured up the gain many times—it amounts to a clear increase in shelf room of 25 per cent.

Here's the Great Idea at Last.

One day last week my secetary handed me this letter and said he thought it was important enough to be answered by me personally:—

————, Pa., Nov. 21; 1916.

Dear Stroller:—

I have read your weekly talks and feel that I know you well enough to ask you for some advice. Why do not the jobbers in the wholesale grocery line give as good credits as the jobbers in the other lines? My jobber begins to write letters to me the minute my account is over thirty days old, and if it happens to get sixty days he threatens me with a lawsuit. The jobbers in the dry goods line give two and three months on certain goods, and I have a brother in the jewelry line that gets three and four months and I think six months on diamonds. Why should the grocer be held down to thirty days when the retail dry goods dealer and the jewelry dealer get three or six months? My opinion is that if the jobber would give the retail grocer longer credit, he could meet the chain store better, for often he has to pay for his goods before he gets in his money for them, which takes a lot of capital. The retail jeweler has a chance to get in his money before he has to pay for his goods, and then the jewelry business is mostly cash, while the grocery business is mostly credit. Why not start a campaign in your columns to have the jobbers give the retail grocer three months' credit like other jobbers?

Yours,

I ain't going to print this correspondent's name, because maybe he wrote to me confidential. I'll cut off me good right hand before I'll give up anything anybody tells me confidential, unless I can get some money by doing it, and I don't see any money coming through in this case.

I'm going to do better for you than you ask me to do, my friend. I'm going to start a campaign right here and now to have jobbers sell goods to retailers without them having to ever pay for 'em. Why should a jobber, with all the money he has, ask a retailer, that has so much less, to pay for the little goods he gets from him?

(Don't break in by clapping like that; I get so much applause I'm sick of it.)

I figure out that the jobber's got a hundred times as much goods as a retailer, therefore he oughtn't to be stingy with 'em, ought he? Ain't we here on earth to help our brother that has less than we've got? Sure we are. The idea of a jobber selling goods to a retailer and kicking when he ain't paid right on the dot of thirty days! Shame on you jobbers! You ought to be glad that us retailers are willing to take your goods and keep 'em from spoiling on your shelves. Why just suppose a jobber had a big stock of breakfast foods in summer time and us retailers didn't take 'em. They'd pretty quick go bad wouldn't they? Well then, ain't the retailer entitled to something for that? Use your common sense if you've got any.

Of course if a jobber can show that he really needs the money his goods, why maybe that w be a little different. I ain't ur sonable. But there ought to law making him show that he n the coin, or he couldn't collect thing. Just for instance, if jobber in Philadelphia sells a b a retailer in Hagerstown, Md. fore he could get paid for 'en ought to have to go down to erstown with his books and credit man and all his family stand up and prove like a man he needs that money. And couldn't prove it, why then court would say, "No, sir, Jobber, Mr. Retailer needs goods more than you do an don't have to pay you." Ain't fair enough? Sure it is, an Christian too. It's the golden —"do them what does you."

Your scheme is all right to the chain stores, but you ca that mine is a heap better. I' plain it to you. You see the stores have got to pay for e thing they get. They wouldn in my scheme at all. Now i grocer with one store don't ha pay for his goods, as he wo my scheme goes through, why you see what a cinch it would lick the chain store? D'ye see Ain't it the big idea?

You've got to be careful the you put this up to jobbers, be they might not see right awa less it's put up to 'em exactly And not understanding it, might think you was. dippy would be a good idea to

No. 392.—The Iron Safe Clause is in Your Insurance Policy. Do You Know What It Means?

Inasmuch as every reader hereof, if he carries insurance on his stock and fixtures, is bound by what is known as the iron safe clause of the policy, the following letter and my discussion of it should be of universal interest:—

Indiana,

On the 10th of October our store was totally destroyed by fire, oil heater explosion in the evening.

That same day we had sold to a man from Detroit. He had asked to see our books and invoice. Same were accidentally let out of safe in desk and burned up, we just getting out of upstairs with our lives. We had $9,000 insurance in four companies; they refuse settlement because of iron safe clause.

The bank has totals of invoice, also a check record of all our business. In this way we can prove our loss was nearly twice our insurance. We have procured duplicates of our bills bought last year also.

J. C. L.

As I said, practically every—in fact I suppose literally every—insurance policy on stock and fixtures contains the iron safe clause. It is one of a trio of three familiar clauses which now appear in all insurance policies. The first requires the insured to keep a complete set of books. The second requires him to take an inventory, at least once a year, and the third is the iron safe clause, which requires the keeping of the books, at night when the store is closed, in an iron safe. These three provisions are usually in some such form as this:—

> It is a part of the conditions of this policy that the insured shall keep a set of books showing a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases and sales, both for cash and credit and take an itemized inventory of stock on hand at least once every year; and it is further agreed that insured will keep such books and inventory securely locked in a fireproof safe at night and at all times when the store mentioned in this policy is not actually open for business. It is further agreed that in event of loss, insured will produce said books and inventory. Failure to comply with these conditions shall render this policy null and void and no suit or action at law shall be maintained thereunder for any loss.

The importance of the above correspondent's question can now be seen.

The iron safe provision has been upheld in almost every State, and there is now no question as to its validity. I have reason to believe that thousands of merchants—not always the smallest ones, either—ignore this provision entirely. If they do, and fire results, and by reason of the fire they cannot produce their books and inventory, or any good substitute for them, they will lose their insurance without a doubt. The policy is only void, however, when failure to keep the books in the iron safe results in inability to produce the books after a fire. If the books and inventory are rescued, the policy stands, even though they were not kept in the safe. The theory of this clause is perfectly sound. It is that the books and the inventory are the best evidence of what goods were on hand at the time of the fire. And a merchant who carelessly sacrifices that evidence will not be permitted to guess at what he had on hand.

The iron safe clause is in force only when the store is closed for business. As long as it is open, no matter what hour it is, the books need not go in the safe.

I find from an examination of the cases that there is a tendency on the parts of the courts to prevent insurance companies from being too technical about the iron safe clause. In other words, from laying any traps for their customers. The courts realize the need of the very best possible evidence of what properly has been destroyed by a fire. And they will not shield the business man who carelessly loses that—where the loss is vital. But there is quite a number of cases which hold that where the failure to keep the books in a safe did not prejudice the insurance company, in other words, did not make it liable to have to pay too much damage, the policy will be allowed to stand. For instance, in one case, a merchant had kept regular books taken inventory as he was requ to do, but a fire struck him night when some of his books out of the safe, and the latter destroyed. The insurance com pleaded the iron safe clause an fused to pay, although everyt bearing on the fire which the books had contained could be plied from other records. court refused to invalidate the icy for such a reason, ruling tha loss of the books was not vital there were duplicate records they contained.

Another case bore conside similarity to the correspondent' store which was covered by a containing the iron safe clause closed one night, but the propr stayed behind to take an inver The books were accidentally le and destroyed by a fire whic curred while the proprietor actually working there, and th surance company refused to Here, too, the merchant could nish from other records all tha destroyed books would have sh

Penny-Pricing Made Easy By the Shuman System

STEADILY advancing costs on everything you buy force you to raise your prices. By pricing your goods, in penny figures. 7c, 9c, 11c, 24c, 29c, 46c, etc., you get the reputation of giving bargains and at the same time protect yourself against the advance in your costs.

The Shuman System of Shelf-pricing Solves This Problem BEAUTIFULLY

It enables you to change prices day by day by shifting the price clips from shelf to shelf, or by pasting new printed stickers on the clips. You can make any price up to 99c from our combination of 20 stickers. The Shuman System consists of galvanized steel clamps that spring onto the edge of shelf, box, basket or crate—and printed gummed stickers that you paste on the face of the clamps.

Try One Set—to Start With

It consists of 50 metal clamps and 1110 gummed price labels. Price of the set $3.25. Extra clamps $2.50 per 100. Extra gummed labels 10c for 50 of a kind.

Order through your jobber or if he does not yet carry them, we will ship to you by parcel post prepaid, on receipt of price.

e the destruction of the books not deprive the company of any rmation about the goods on d at the fire: all this was forthing from duplicate invoices.

s I understand the correspondcase, the store was closed for ness, and some of the books e out of the safe, and were deyed by the fire. The occupants he floor above barely escaped their lives. If the goods on d at the time of the fire can be vn by other records, and if all information which the books ld have given can be supplied ome other way, I believe that court will probably rule that the ect of the iron safe clause, i. e., supplying of complete informaregarding goods on hand, has n fulfilled, and the policy will not invalidated. But I apprehend t it will be a close call.

Question: Garnishee, Medina, Y.—1—Can the salary of an emyee in our post office be garnish-?

:—There seems to be some diseement as to whether an account be "proven" in court if same been kept on the small slips now common use, such as is used in McCaskey register. A lawyer h whom I talked contended that ording to the laws of New York ite only the old time set of books uld be accepted. It seems to me t if such is the case the laws ould be changed so as to entirely viate any difficulty which might se in the use of the modern sysns of handling accounts.

Answer.—1—No, if the employee a Government employee.

2—An account can be proven in y way that amounts to legal evince. A witness can use any kind a memorandum, made at or about time of the transaction, to resh his memory. This is a differ- thing than bringing suit on a ok account. If you do that you ist have your book account in gal form; that is in the form of a ok of original entry. Loose slips, wever, will sometimes be accepted a book of original entry if they ntain all details of the transacon.

When Your Customer Orders "Tea," She Means

LIPTON'S TEA

Extensive and persistent advertising has taught women everywhere that "tea—that's only half a word—the other half is LIPTON'S." This message meets their eyes on every side—in their favorite magazines, in street cars, on billboards, in newspapers they see our advertising. Not only by advertising, but also by the recommendation of satisfied users has Lipton's Tea become the most widely known and therefore the easiest tea to sell.

You're always safe in filling orders with Lipton's Tea, because the airtight, sealed package preserves its aroma and strength, and you can depend on its flavor giving satisfaction. You can also please any class of trade with Lipton's Tea because we pack ten different blends. Let customers choose between Ceylon and India Black, English Breakfast, Black and Green Mixed, Formosa-Oolong, or Green Tea.

Good profit for you and a convenient package to handle; a well-known article that sells steadily and pleases all classes of customers—that's the story of Lipton's Tea in a few words.

Bell Phone, { Diamond 650 / Poplar 3160 — Orders Called for and Delivered

This is one of the best printed advertisements that have come in for a long time, but I don't consider it very good advertising. It is practically nothing more than a price-list. To be sure, some of the prices quoted are apparently cut prices, but all the same, they were probably not as effective as they would have been had they been accompanied by some persuasion. Of course I admit at once that no persuasion is required when you offer Quaker Oats at 8 cents. The simple offer ought to get orders and doubtless does—always. But everything is not as well known as Quaker Oats. A lot of the goods advertised on this card aren't well known at all, and therefore the price doesn't mean anywhere near as much. It ought to be supported by some talk about the goods.

If I had been writing this advertisement I should have grouped all the well known articles like Quaker Oats and Peterman's Roach Powder, and Kneipp's Malt Coffee, under one head like "Well Known Goods at Remarkably Low Prices." Everything else, such as "Good Drinking Coffee" and "15c. bottle Pickles," I should have had something to say about. "A Few Hints for Hallowe'en" I consider space thrown away. "Hints" that people eat nuts and apples around Hallowe'en are wholly superfluous. If you have any special nuts to sell, or nuts to sell at special prices, advertise them, but "A Few Hints for Hallowe'en," followed by some ordinary quotations of some ordinary goods, will not sell anything, in my judgment. A footnote like "Have you plenty of nuts for Hallowe'en?" is all right, just as a reminder, but further than that I don't believe it good policy to go—unless you have something special to say.

* * *

The more I see of advertising, and the more I observe of the results which come from advertising, the more I am convinced that simple price-list advertising doesn't pay, even though it is advertising of well known goods and gets a few orders. I should do very little of that if I were running a retail store. The kind of advertising that in my judgment pays best not only in the long run, but at the moment, is the advertising that gets people in the store wanting to buy the goods not alone because they are advertised at a cut price, but because of their quality and character, as revealed through the advertising.

Your Customers Know Franklin Carton Sugar As Soon As They See It

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is a neat, clean, attractive package that looks well on your shelf, and once seen by customers is sure to be remembered. They remember the cleanliness, the sparkling purity of the sugar, and insist on having the CARTON that keeps it clean and pure.

Sugar is probably the most sensitive article sold in a grocery store and should be protected from dust and dirt. Scientists tell us that it breeds germs with dangerous rapidity, when once exposed. Women may not examine sugar to see if it has germs in it and they may be content to use sugar which needs no examination to show that it is dusty; BUT, as soon as they see FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR they KNOW it is better, purer, finer, cleaner sugar than they have ever had before. If you are the proprietor of a pure food store you can tell your customers about FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in a way that will increase their respect for your desire to serve them with the purest and cleanest foods which can be obtained. (See foot note at the bottom of this advertisement, "What to tell customers.")

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

Admitting for a moment that some nationally advertised goods don't pay sufficient profit, which is the harder job :—to make them pay a profit, or to sell (in any considerable quantity) unknown brands?

It seems to us we would always rather work with the demand than against it. Think that over.

This Contributor Says Package Goods Would Not Have Become So Important If Retailers Had Properly Wrapped Bulk Goods

Here Is a Pretty Good Argument for Paying More Attention to the Manner of Wrapping and Packing Bulk Goods.

It is a very usual thing to read comments and criticisms offered by public and food control authorities on the cost of the fancy packages which contain some of the staple food commodities. The fact remains, however, that the public cheerfully pays for these packages. It has long since been demonstrated that people appreciate neatness and sanitation, and are willing to pay what it costs.

The fact that the food retailer has neglected the proper packaging of bulk foods has in a large measure made possible the ready sale of fancy package foods at prices which no retailer would have nerve enough to ask for the same thing put up in bulk. There is no good reason why this condition should exist.

Bulk foods have always been regarded as cheaper than package foods. This does not mean that they have sold at a less price. "Cheaper" in this case is used as a term of depreciation. People who would pay for meat put up in a fancy carton, or in a can or jar, do so most often because of the appearance of the package and the careful observance of sanitary requirements which mark its preparation for the market. Few retailers would consider that they could do as well. Very often, however, the bulk foods which they have for sale are really higher in quality than those which are contained in the packages on their shelves. All of these bulk foods can be sold at a lower price than package goods, and universally they carry a more generous profit.

No bulk food package has ever approximated the cost of the factory packed food package. If the retailer would give himself as much to spend for the package as the food manufacturer spends on his pretty packages the retailer would feel that he was guilty of wasteful extravagance in putting so much money into mere wrappings.

This state of mind has led the retailer to use cheap and unsanitary containers and wrappings for bulk foods. Butter dishes are principally used for containing these various foods. They were called butter dishes because they were used for carrying butter almost exclusively. Now they are containers of practically every kind of bulk food. Butter dishes have always been about the cheapest things in the market. Their effect upon the food and the appearance of it has not entered into the matter other than to give the characteristic of cheapness.

Recently, however, the best retailers have demanded a strictly sanitary and attractive package for bulk food lines. Some manufacturers have been found with courage enough to make such a line of bulk food carriers, and the fact that they have an extensive sale now indicates that a good proportion of the retail trade recognizes the advisability of carefully packaging bulk foods. One of the best of these modern new dishes is known as the "Riteshape" dish.

Attractive packages for bulk goods have their principal effect in increasing the apparent value of the food which they carry. They give the element and appearance of quality to the foods which it conveyed to consumers and created satisfaction and increased business for bulk food lines.

The lesson of this situation is very obvious. The retailer is using poor judgment who saves a few pennies in an effort to economize on the packaging of the bulk lines which he has for sale. He can get better prices and more business by following the good example set him by the manufacturers who pack the foods at the factory in an attractive and sanitary container which attract and please the public.

Damage Suit Grows Out of Food Condemnation.

Frank Oakley, State Food Inspector for the Southern California district, has been made the defendant in a $2,500 damage suit brought by V. Kozak, Los Angeles macaroon manufacturer. In his complaint Kozak asserts that for years he has done a profitable and extensive business in the manufacture and sale of "Kozak's honey-cocoanut macaroons." He alleges that during all this period he has used pure materials, and that at all times his product has complied with the State and National food laws. Despite this fact, he asserts, Oakley arrested him on August 17, 1916, charging him with misbranding his product. Oakley's claim was that the term "macaroons" could apply only to a product made from almond paste, and containing neither flour, cocoanut nor honey. The case came for trial October 30th before a jury, and Kozak was declared not guilty. In his suit Kozak charges that the Food Inspector arrested him maliciously and without probable cause, and that as a result of the publicity given the case, many merchants discontinued selling Kozak's macaroons because they believed them to violate the food laws.

No. 3 Tomatoes Will Cost Twenty Cents More a Dozen to Pack in 1917.

So Says the Cost Accounting Committee of the National Canners' Association. Everything Used in Canning Has Advanced, Including Cans, Cases, Labels, Coal, Labor, etc.

The Cost Accounting Committee of the National Canners' Association has issued a statement showing that in 1917 it will cost 20 cents a dozen more to pack tomatoes in 1917 than it cost in 1916. The cost in 1916 was 80 cents. The statement is as follows:—

TO THE TOMATO CANNER.

In 1916 we told you it would cost 80 cents per dozen to pack No. 3 standard tomatoes on contracted raw stock, and it did unless you enjoyed special vantages.

In 1917 it will cost a more. We have gone over matter most carefully with best information at hand fr the most reliable sources, a while at this time it is impo ble to figure the exact cost prices are not yet named many articles, yet we h made the following estimat the increase in cost of pack No. 3 tomatoes, which we sent to you for your most c ful consideration. There n was a year when the ques of a future price for toma was harder to determine tha will be in 1917, but whate you do don't sell at a loss even at cost as you have often done in the past.

ɔropos of the campaign on here duce the prices of various food ucts, notably eggs, by boycotts ɔther schemes, a letter has been en to President Wilson by J. Dillon, State Commissioner oods and Markets, suggesting a Federal Commissioner be ap- ed to investigate the problems confronting producers and con- rs. Mr. Dillon says that only Federal regulation can these problems be solved because they are beyond State legislation.

He enumerated these as follows:—

Lack of definite and uniform standards or grades of farm products; lack of standard and uniform packages for the transportation and sale of food products; difficulty and expense of securing definite information in regard to the movement and destination of crops: no definite or complete report of the volume of goods held in cold storage in the many storage houses throughout the country; a discrimination in time and rates against various kinds of products and different locations; manipulation of prices by speculators and food exchanges and speculators on one hand, and the official quotations of sales and prices on the other; lack of public abattoirs and open markets for the sale of meat cattle at competitive prices; lack of terminal facilities for the sale of farm products and economic distribution of the same.

"The result of the lack of information as to the movement of crops often results in a glut or over-supply in one market, while another center not far away is short of the same food supply," asserted Commissioner Dillon in his letter.

"A great deal of money is spent by dealers and associations of dealers and exchanges to gather information, not only as to the arrival of produce at different centres, but also in tabulating the prices. A great deal of this expense is duplicated, and if we could have the information gathered by the Federal Government and distributed to the different centres, it would be of great service both to the producer and the consumer of food products, as well as to the men who are engaged in the distribution of them."

The National City Bank expresses the following opinion upon the present business situation:—

The marked feature of the past month has been the rise of wages, raw materials and food products, placing the industries of the country upon a still higher level of costs, and, of course, accompanied by higher prices for all goods. Perhaps it would be more accurate to place the incessant demand for finished goods first in order, as the cause of all the other phenomena, but the influences act and react upon each other. The essential fact is that the pressure for goods of all kinds is greater than ever before known, that all the means of production are crowded to the limit, and that there are not enough goods to go around. Under these conditions there is probably an extra demand, as there was for a time last spring, due to apprehensions that supplies will be short and prices still higher in the future. This was evidently the case for a time in the coal situation, which has since eased noticeably, although there is still anxiety about the supply, on account of the car shortage rather than a shortage of coal at the mines.

WITH THE EDITOR

What Ails Prices?

Everybody is asking what is the matter with prices, and why they should have advanced so much more than the advance in the first cost. I can answer the question: it is because everybody who has a price advanced to him, adds something to that advance as he passes it along to his customer.

Last week I talked with a book publisher who supplied a splendid illustration. He formerly made a certain grade of book which cost him 18 cents to produce. He sold it to the retail dealer for 30 cents and the retailer sold it again at half a dollar. Remember the profits made by both parties—12 cents by the manufacturer, 20 cents by the retailer.

The advance in the price of paper forced the cost of this book up to 30 cents; increase in cost 12 cents. The manufacturer advanced his price to the retailer to *fifty cent*s, and his profit then became twenty cents, an increase of 8 cents. The retailer resold the book at 85 cents, and his profit was then 35 cents, or an increase of 15 cents.

And the consumer paid 35 cents more than he paid before, for a book which had increased in cost only twelve cents.

That is what the matter is with prices. Instead of adding the actual increase, we cannot refrain from sticking on a little more than the increase as the market moves up. Grocers do it, hardware men do it, dry goods men do it—everybody does it. Is it legitimate? Certainly it is legitimate, but in the end some of us will undoubtedly wake up to the realization that it has turned out bad business.

Slander on Food Products.

A California food inspector charged a macaroon manufacturer with misbranding his product. A jury trial was had and the manufacturer was found not guilty. Now he has sued the inspector for $2,500 damages for alleged defamation of character and malicious prosecution. Unless the inspector was exceedingly careless, I have no expectation that the damage suit will get anywhere. If he believed the charge was true, and had reason to, and used his best judgment, and particularly if the suit was authorized by the State Food Department, he is not liable at all. The damage suit, however, is a good advertisement and as such will be worth all it cost to the manufacturer.

Food agents are much more careful than they used to be about making statements against particular brands of food products. Many of them used to ignore the fact that a manufacturer's good name or a merchant's good name, was his most valuable asset, and they would rush into print with the meanest kind of charges. I have often wondered why some of these slandered people didn't start damage suits, for the grounds were ample, that is sure. Certain Government food inspectors under the Federal Food and Drug Act were especially reckless in this particular.

To-day you can talk with a food inspector for a long while before you will get him to say anything against a manufacturer, unless the facts have in some way been established so there is no question about it.

The Thanksgiving Turkey Incident.

A large wholesale poultry dealer told a representative of this paper during the week that he did not handle one-tenth of the Thanksgiving turkeys that he usually handles. Why? Because he saw the coming collapse in the market, due to the inflated prices, and wisely kept out from under. He further said that some of his customers who had never before failed to sell turkeys at Thanksgiving sold none this year.

Probably everybody, wholesale and retail, who handled turkeys largely this Thanksgiving, came out behind. The price dropped until in some sections retailers sold good stock at 24 cents a pound. How completely this supports a statement made on this page a week or so ago—that consumers always have the remedy for extortionate prices within their grasp. All they need to do is not to buy, which certainly is a remedy easily applied. There is not a thing that we cannot do without, but the consumer has never up to now acted as if he realized that. He has been very slow to drop a thing and take up another. These crises need quick action, just as was given the turkey situation, and quick action will always bring results. A few more incidents like the turkey incident, and the speculators may become less greedy.

Sticking by a Bad Contract.

You can't help but admire a man who sticks by a bad contract because it is his contract, and you can't help but despise one who sneaks his way out of a contract, merely because it has turned out bad for him.

In the Legal Department this week is told the story of a California sugar refiner who in 1914 made a contract to supply a wholesale grocery house with its "full requirements" of sugar for August, 1916, at a certain price. In August, 1916, the price had nearly doubled and the refiner succeeded in getting out of his contract because it was legally null and void. The court said it should have mentioned a definite amount of sugar. The refiner saved nearly $14,000 just by that decision.

Personally, if I did business in California I should never feel safe in doing business with that refiner. A man who will destroy his own work, who will go back on his own word, who will say "yes, I agreed to do it, but I had my fingers crossed when I did it," is not exactly an admirable person, when one remembers why he did it. He wins his case, it is true, but I should think he would be paying enormously for his victory.

Another.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has no desire to become conspicuous in publications that go to consumers, but really, if this thing keeps on, that may happen. Here is another editorial on a familiar subject time from the New York "G

Many Canned Goods Packers Not Morally Strong Enough to Keep Their Contracts

This Year's Tremendous Advances in the Value of Future Canned Goods Has Revealed Many Moral Shysters. Throwing Over Contracts on Various Flimsy Pretexts. One Indignant Buyer Attaches a Car of Goods.

There is a deep feeling of resentment permeating the wholesale grocery trade, and indirectly the retail trade, over the contemptible conduct of a rather surprisingly large number of canned goods packers over the deliveries of goods sold early in this year for future delivery. The difference between the price at which the futures were sold, and the price that the goods were worth at time of delivery, was so very great, that the morals of quite a number of packers couldn't stand the strain, and they have foxed out of their contracts, often in a perfectly barefaced manner.

In many cases packers, particularly tomato packers, have deliberately laid down and refused to deliver any tomatoes whatever, although they had made pro rata contracts and admitted they had packed some goods. One Maryland packer sold something like 25,000 cases of futures and packed about 18,000. He made pro rata contracts, which bound him to deliver the buyer's pro rata share of his entire pack, if the pack was less than 100 per cent. of all future contracts. This man failed to deliver anything whatever on several of his contracts, and his excuse was that he had filled his orders in full as far as the goods would go, and then threw the balance of the contracts away! This after he had signed pro rata contracts. Since he must know better than this, the inference is that he sold what he did not deliver, at to-day's market, which is 50 per cent. above the price at which he had sold for future delivery.

In another case a Maryland packer sold gallon tomatoes at $2.40 per dozen. The price when he came to deliver was $5, a strong inducement to throw over the contract which was not lost on the packer. He shipped the goods to the buyer in Philadelphia, but did not tell the railroad company or the warehouse to notify the buyer on arrival. He then drew on the buyer for the goods, depositing the draft in bank, but before the time came to pay the draft, he recalled all papers and cancelled the contract on the ground that the buyer had not paid the draft in time, although the buyer had gone to the bank on November 15th to pay the draft, and the goods did not arrive in the warehouse until November 27th. By this cancellation the packer stood to make $2,200, at least he did until the buyer, in deep indignation, attached the goods in the warehouse.

There have been a great many such cases, all of which reveal packers who are not strong enough to stand up for their own contracts when they can make more by doing otherwise.

Veteran Retailer Tells of Salesmen That Have Called on Him in Thirty Years

Divides All Salesmen Into Seven Classes. Crooked Salesmen All Dig Their Own Graves. Personality a Salesman's Chief Asset. Honesty the One Quality Without Which a Salesman Cannot Succeed.

One road man—Bill Young—was the bluest soul I ever came in contact with. There was a time when Bill used to affect me a good deal. I was more susceptible to such things then. I'll never forget how I was cured. It was another salesman who cured me—a little breezy, slangy chap from Chicago. He certainly had personality. He went off the road about ten years ago and opened a place of his own. I'll wager there isn't a dull moment in it all day long.

Bill Young had been in one day and had painted a gloomy picture. It was during the Spanish war, and we business men didn't just know where we were. After Bill had gone the Chicago chap blew in.

"I don't believe I want a thing in your line," I said. "Business is very bad; there's a feeling of unrest. A whole lot of people are out of work and until this war is settled we'll all have to lay low. I find there seems to be a good deal of fear about the situation."

"I'll bet a big apple Bill Young's been in here," he said, suspiciously.

"Why yes, he has—not fifteen minutes ago," I answered.

"Sure! I knew he had by the color of that dope you're handing me. Darn that old calamity howler, why don't he go talk to the weather man!"

"Bill watches conditions pretty close," I said.

"Bosh!" I said, "Bill's been gloomy for thirty years and his own wife looks blue to him. He can't see a grain of hope in anything. I wouldn't care a blame if he'd only keep his feelings to himself! What right's he got to come in here and get you all billious and spoil my business! Listen here! Bill will probably see every man I'm going to see to-day, before I do, and I'll gamble that my orders'll fall off 50 per cent. just on that account. He'll smear yellow over everything and scare everybody to death! It ain't right—he hadn't ought to do it!"

"I'm sure he didn't affect me," I said. "I———"

"You tell that to Li Hung Chang!" he said. "I know he did! That kind of dope affects anybody."

"Well, how do you find general conditions?" I asked him.

"General conditions are all right as far as I can see," he said. "But I don't care a blame what they are. All I want to know is, how's conditions in my line. They're as fine as silk. You oughtn't to care any more about general conditions than I do. What do you care if the Steel Trust don't pay a dividend or the railroads ain't buying steel rails? Is that going to make the people here buy any less of your stuff?"

"I don't know about that," I said.

"Well, I know about it, and I say it ain't. We can settle this in two seconds. How is your business? You forget all that slush Bill Young handed you and just tell me how your business is?"

"Well—I don't know as I can complain," I had to say. "Last month was ahead of last year by about 12 per cent."

"Well, why in thunder do you listen to Bill Young's croaks, then?" he demanded, and I had to own up there wasn't any reason.

The remarkable thing about these croakers is that they kill their own business, yet they can't see it. Bill Young didn't sell half the goods he could have sold, and other salesmen used to tell me time and time again he was the easiest competitor they had. They constantly throw water on their own fire.

I don't know whether any more of you readers have struck the kind of salesman who looks around the minute he comes in the store to see if any girls work there. I have, but I never bought anything of his yet, after I found it out. Scavengers of the road.

Funny thing, while I was writing this article I happened to pick up one of my trade papers and read this:—

> The greatest possible quality in a salesman is persistence, and this applies equally well to a salesman on the road and a salesman behind the counter. Both are selling merchandise often to people who do not want it, and both use the same arts to make the sale. A salesman should never cease his solicitations until the goal is reached. He should be the soul of persistence, and in the end he will be sure to wear down opposition and success will then be his.

Well, I don't know. There is persistence and there is persistence. There's an insurance agent in my town who goes out for one of those 10 cents a week insurance companies. He has had his eye on me for over a year now and he finds out from my wife when I'm sure to be at home. Then he lays for me.

Against a nerve like his I'm sort of helpless, and I let him get at me many a time when I don't want to. He's persistent in his work to sell me, just like the fly is that sits and sits on your bald spot and drives you to swashing in your skull with a hammer to get rid of him. Sometimes I hate him! It seems to me every minute of my time when I'm home is eaten up by listening to that fellow's talk. And in the end he'll sell me— I know it; I know it, for my struggle gets weaker every day.

Now, suppose he does sell me in the end; is that success? Not if I know what success is. He simply worried a poor, weak fellow into doing something he didn't want to do. Plenty of fellows can do that, but that isn't selling goods. It's simply watching nerves and putting it over because his is bigger. Selling goods is making your customer want to be sold.

I can give you another case of persistency in a salesman. I have a brother in the retail hardware business in the same town with me. Up to six months ago he used to buy some stuff from a New York house through one of its road men, who, take it from me, was the biggest nuisance ever put on earth to inspire murder. He was a German, though of course that didn't have anything to do with his being a nuisance. He simply didn't know what no meant. You couldn't turn him down. If you tried to do it this morning he'd be around this afternoon and he'd stay till you let him talk again. If you turned him this afternoon he'd be arou night, or if you heard abo coming and got away, he'd to your house. You couldn't him—he never got tired. H there to sell you goods and h you or kill you.

He was decent enough, stand—his manners were al —it was simply that you c shake him off.

Well, he wore down this b of mine pretty quick when h started to call on him abou years ago, and he's been selli almost ever since. Not muc something. He bought simp cause he couldn't shoo off Fr less he did. It was a case or have him around forever

If my brother told me o told me a hundred times t didn't like the stuff he got Fritz's house. He could b same or better stuff from a house—from two other hou think he said—for less mone

"Why don't you do it th said once.

"I've told you why," answered. "You know Fritz as I do."

"All the same, I can't see said. "There must be some get away from Fritz. He make you give him an You're bigger than he is, wh you kick him out? Why do set his coat on fire—do any After you've told him to g you've got a right to put him he won't go."

"You wouldn't do it, eithe said, and just then I thought 10-cent insurance agent, pr sitting on my doorstep that waiting for me, and I wen to my own store.

Now, I want to tell you wha pened. The minute Fritz we the road my brother stopped ing from that house. You c hire him to give them a order.

Was Fritz a good salesman was persistent, and he sold but he didn't do it by being a salesman. He did it by bei prize nagger of the whole He simply blackmailed men wanted to get rid of him int ing him an order, for that w only way they could get rid o That is not salesmanship if I anything about it.

No Hesitation

¶ There is one definite appeal which will eliminate all doubt in any customer's mind as to where he or she should buy. It is the sign—"We Give S. H. Green Stamps."

¶ Millions of thrifty shoppers never hesitate to trade where they see it, for they know that cash purchases made where it is shown will be rewarded by receiving a discount of unquestionable worth.

¶ Can you afford to let such opportunities to make "cash" sales pass by? By showing the sign "We Give S. H. Green Stamps," you are making a direct appeal to a thrifty trait of human nature and eliminating all chances of hesitation.

The Ham Question

¶ Good ham is sweet, with a tangy saltiness, tender and close fleshed. Fried or broiled, it's as sweet as a nut, and if everybody could get that kind they'd eat ham ten times as often.

¶ The average ham is stringy and briny and tough. It doesn't suit it all, but by and by a lot of consumers come to believe all ham is like that.

¶ Vogt's Liberty Brand Hams are not like that. They are precisely the kind of hams we described in the second paragraph. It would be foolish to say this if it wasn't true, wouldn't it? You'll be glad you got in touch with Liberty Brand Hams and so will your customers.

Effect of Advancing Markets on Fire Insurance

When a Stock of Goods is Inventoried at One Price When Insured, and is Worth a Much Higher Price When Burned, Which Price Can be Collected From the Insurance Company? Expert Says Actual Value at Time of Fire.

On numerous occasions the question has been brought up as to whether, if a retail merchant inventoried merchandise at the cost price when market prices at the time of the inventory were much higher, he would not be at a disadvantage in the event of a fire, in being compelled to produce the last inventory, and whether the prices on it would not be taken as the basis of adjustment of fire loss rather than the market price.

Insurance authorities assure us that the basis on which the adjustment of a claim would be made would be the actual cash value of the property at the time any loss or damage occurs, not exceeding what it would then cost to replace with property of like kind and value.

The actual cash value may be the market price, or it may be subject to depreciation for the difference between old and new property or other causes.

In the settlement of a loss the question of the first cost of the property has little to do with it, the assured being entitled to collect on the basis of the actual cash value the day of the fire, and he should keep his insurance up to such percentage of the actual value as will comply with the co-insurance conditions expressed in fire insurance policies.

The foregoing statements make it very clear that the co-insurance clause would operate on a basis of the cash value of the merchandise or property at the time of the fire, so that if the insured, when making proof of loss, would show insurance carried less than the amount guaranteed under co-insurance clause, he would only recover in proportion of the amount of loss sustained as the amount of insurance bears to the amount under co-insurance clause if such a clause is a part of the policy or policies.

Example:—

A stock of merchandise inventories at actual cost price $100,000, and is insured under 80 per cent. co-insurance clause at $80,000, and market value increases to $140,000, and amount of insurance is not increased and a loss occurs amounting to $20,000. The assured should have increased his insurance to 80 per cent. of the increased valuation, $140,000 which 80 per cent. is $112,000; therefore having failed to do this he receives 80/112 of his claim of $20,000, or $14,285.71, incurring a loss of $5,714.29.

In view of the foregoing, it will be the part of wisdom to watch insurance protection closely so that the amount of insurance carried accords protection to the stock at its cash value, which is the cost of replacement with like merchandise at the time of the loss.

Those who do not so increase the amount of fire insurance in keeping with increasing values are liable to be compelled to bear a portion of any fire loss at the time of an adjustment of claim under insurance policies containing the co-insurance clause.

These Questions Will Show You If You Know Your Business

National Credit Men's Association Sends List of Searching Inquiries to 100,000 Retailers. Nothing in Them Which Any Retailer Should Not Be Able to Answer.

The National Credit Men's Association has sent out to merchants all over the country, both wholesale and retail, a list of questions which are intended to show the merchant himself whether he really knows as much about his business as he should. The following questions have been sent to 100,000 retailers in all lines of business throughout the whole United States. The retailer who can answer all of the following questions the way they should be answered has a satisfactory working knowledge of his business:—

Do your accounts show your total cash sales and total charge sales separately, yearly or monthly?

Do you keep a "purchase account" which shows you the total amount of goods bought?

Do you know how much money you save yearly by discounting your bills?

How often do you take stock?

Do you make allowance in your inventory for depreciation, or dead stock?

Do you make allowance for depreciation of store fixtures, horses and wagons, tools, etc.?

Do you figure it at cost or selling price?

Do you know how many times you turned stock last year?

Do you consider the stock you carry too large or too small for the amount of business you are doing?

Do you carry fire insurance?

Are your stock and fixtures fully covered?

Do you know the percentage of your gross profit to total sales?

Do you know the percentage of your expenses to the total sales?

Do you keep an exact account of all your expenses?

Into how many separate accounts are your expenses subdivided?

Do you own the building in which you do business?

If so, do you charge a fixed amount for rent as an expense?

Do you charge your own salary as an expense?

If not, do you charge all your living expenses to the business?

Do you provide for losses for "bad accounts" in fixing your selling price?

Are the goods taken out of your store for your family use charged as a business expense?

Do you charge interest on your money invested?

How often do you make up a "profit and loss" statement?

Do you know the total amount that you owe at least once a month?

Do you know the total amount that is due you at least once a month?

Do you discount your bill

Important Malted Milk Decisi

The House of Lords decided ing the week that the w "malted milk" were merely des tive. Horlick's Malted Milk, American concern, sued for an junction against Hedley's Ma Milk. The First Court refused injunction, the Court of App upheld the decision and now Lords settle the question fi against Horlick's.

mackerel are not abundant and the price is tending higher. Cod, hake and haddock are still scarce and firm. Salmon shows no material change for the week, although the tendency is all higher. Pinks are now being quoted on the spot in a large way at $1.25 a dozen, which is a very high price for them. Domestic sardines are exceedingly scarce and the best quotation now in a large way is $4 to $4.25 a case. This takes them completely out of the 5-cent class.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is in fair demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is ruling very high, particularly for export, and the consumptive demand is small. Molasses shows no change; moderate demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are on their way downward, and the closing quotation on Maryland 3s in a large way f. o. b. factory is $1.25. Some second hands holders will sell on the spot at $1.25, which is a concession of about 3 cents a dozen. The packers are not pressing for sale because they have very few tomatoes to dispose of, but there is still a large unsold stock somewhere that will have to be reckoned with in the near future. The price is believed to be still 20 cents too high. Corn and peas show no change for the week. Everything is very firm on account of scarcity. Apples have advanced again and the average quotation is $3.25 for New York State gallons in a large way. California canned goods are very quiet, and many lines are very scarce. There is no change for the week. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change, except that spinach has now reached $1.50 per dozen in a large way f. o. b. factory.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are very quiet at unchanged prices for the week. With prices as high as they are, nobody will buy more than his immediate needs. It is said that there are about 25,000,000 pounds of prunes unsold on the coast, which packers say will not suffice for the probable demand. Peaches and apricots show no change; moderate, seasonable demand. Raisins are also unchanged for the week. Currants are now quoted at 20 cents per pound in cartons, 19 cents in barrels. Hallowee dates are quoted at 10 cents in a large way, which is about twice the normal price. Fard dates are also available to a limited extent at 13 to 14 cents per pound in a large way, which is about 5 cents above normal.

Butter.

There is a normal consumptive demand for butter and the quality arriving is as good as usual for the season. The market is steady and unchanged with no material fluctuation in sight.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady at a decline of 5 cents a dozen due to increased receipts and falling off in the consumptive demand. The present situation is healthy and if there is any change there is more likely to be a slight advance than a decline. Storage eggs declined about 3 cents during the week and Philadelphia is now the lowest egg market in the country.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are now quoted in a large way at $6.75 a bushel, which is a shade off as compared with a week ago. Marrows are quoted at $7.50 a bushel and are in better demand than pea beans. California limas are now ruling at 8.25 to 8.50 per pound in a large way. Green and Scotch peas are ruling around $5 a bushel, which is an almost unprecedentedly high price. The demand is very poor.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are firm and unchanged with a light consumptive demand. Pure lard is steady but unchanged and in light demand. Compound lard is unchanged and in

Store Prestige

Regardless of courteous salesmanship and prompt delivery service, the greatest factor in the successful operation of a retail store is what is sold and its quality.

The wise dealer knows this. He knows, too, that National Biscuit Company Products give his store a reputation for quality, a prestige that makes new customers and keeps old ones.

Through nation-wide advertising N. B. C. crackers, cookies, wafers and snaps are well and favorably known almost everywhere. Display N. B. C. Products in your store. Your customers will ask for them by name.

moderate demand. Barreled pork steady and in light demand at unchanged prices, as are dried beef and canned meats.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm with only a moderate consumptive demand. Prices unchanged. Stocks are said to be much larger than usual owing to the heavy export. The entire situation is healthy.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Olive oil continues in excellent demand from all quarters. Italy cables that owing to very unfavorable weather some damage has been done to the crop, and prices for olive oil have been advanced rather rapidly during the last few weeks. Taking it all in all, an advance in the price of olive oil is really due. Compared with the advances in the prices of all other food products, olive oil may be considered as having hardly advanced in price at all.

French mushrooms continue as scarce as ever.

Imported peas and other imported vegetables are naturally very scarce. Both Holland and Denmark have prohibited the exportation thereof. Belgium, of course, has been unable to furnish any, and France has had little to export. Consequently, the scarcity.

Imported Fish Specialties.

All kinds of herrings have been in real good demand this last week—prices unchanged, but very firm.

The trade finally realizing that there is little chance of lower prices for imported sardines in the near future, has come to the conclusion that it means money out of their pockets not to handle imported sardines, even at the present high prices, as they can be readily sold. While it is true that prices for all kinds of imported sardines, French, Portuguese and Norwegian, have advanced very materially, it is still a fact that these advances have been fully justified, and prices for imported sardines, compared with those of other commodities, are really to be considered cheap, or at least reasonable. In Norway, unfortunately, there has been no catch either of sardine-herring or of real brisling, consequently there are hardly any offerings worth while at the present moment. In France, of course, no catch. There should be a good catch of sprats just now, but unfortunately, there is a lack of fishermen, and the few fishermen there dare not venture far out in search of sprats; and furthermore, whatever is packed of French sardines and sprats is badly needed for home consumption. Those are our latest reports from France. In Portugal the catch is rather unsatisfactory.

In consequence of all the aforesaid, prices for all sardines are very strong, and the demand is really good.

Wheat and Flour.

This has been a stormy week in wheat circles. Fear of an embargo and the prospective curtailment of the foreign demand, by reason of the conservation plan of the United Kinkdom, are responsible for the demoralization. Now that the excitement has subsided, let us calmly consider the matter and see if there is any substantial foundation for it.

In our market letter of November 18th we discussed, in detail, the probable saving in consumption that would result from the proposed conservation scheme. We pointed out in this letter that by reason of the large quantities of flour now in transit to the United Kingdom, and the further quantities already under contract, any legislation along this line would effect barely more than six or seven months of the year's consumption, and that a saving of 20 per cent. for this period would mean only 35,000,000 bushels.

With importing nations needing 600,000,000 to 640,000,000 bushels, and only 480,000,000 in prospect in exporting countries, it is readily seen that the task of making both ends meet has only begun; indeed, there is no assurance that so much as 480,000,000 can be obtained from exporting countries; for Australia, from whence 112,000,000 bushels are expected, will harvest this month and India will not harvest until April, so that the 48,000,000 bushels which she is expected to contribute is far from being assured.

The International Institute of Rome, in a recent report, says: "All nations are confronted with a grave situation, owing to the great deficit in wheat crops." It predicts a quick decrease in the large visible supplies both abroad and in this country. It states that the requirements of Europe are enormous. This is further corroborated by the official report that France, alone, during September and October, imported 24,876,000 bushels, as against 16,000,000 bushels for the same period last year—an increase of over 50 per cent.

We must bear in mind that the native crop of France this year is 52,000,000 bushels less than last year and that their imports last year were over 100,000,000 bushels. All reports indicate that during the next eight months imports of foreign wheat will be required on a huge scale.

Notwithstanding the drastic decline in prices, the news of the week has been bullish, in that further reductions have been made in the estimated surplus from Argentina and rust reports from tralia. From a demand and s standpoint, there has been absolute reason for the market decline. the continued talk of an embarg wheat that is bringing about the of confidence that has been mani during the past two weeks. We c believe that an embargo will be on wheat. Those who are most in the effort to bring it about se think that their statement, that more that is exported the less re at home," is an unanswerable argu titions was filed in favor of the legislation. One embargo resolution would prohibit exportation of any farm product or manufactured foodstuffs for one year. The other would empower the President to suspend exportations whenever prices became extortionate and public interests require. Both bills would provide for shipment of food to Americans abroad or to peoples made destitute by the war, pestilence or other extraordinary events. Interstate transportation of cold storage foods, unless the date of storage is distinctly marked, would be prohibited, together with an arbitrary prohibition of interstate transportation of any product in cold storage more than ten months, except butter, which might be held longer. Other food bills included a joint resolution by Representative Lindberg, Republican, of Minnesota, proposing a special Congressional Committee to consider all food embargo measures and to report by February 20th. Representative Emerson, Republican, Ohio, introduced a resolution for report by Secretary of Agriculture on the advisability of a wheat embargo and legislation on shipment of foodstuffs.

Manufacturers Representatives' Association Dines Over Three Hundred Guests.

Holds Annual Banquet at Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. Guests Include Jobbers From Three States. Well-Known Politicians Among Speakers.

The Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives held another of its celebrated annual banquets in the Rose Garden of the Bellevue-Stratford last Thursday evening. Over three hundred men sat down, and the room was filled very nearly to capacity. The Entertainment Committee consisted of George Nowland, chairman; W. R. Cooke, E. T. Gillespie, W. H. Rohr, S. H. Frowert, M. L. James, C. C. Green, C. Herbert Powers, M. L. Root, Truman L. Palmer.

The invited guests included various trade celebrities, representatives of other local associations, and wholesale grocers from all over Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware.

The speakers were Senator Charles A. Snyder, Auditor-General elect, who delivered one of his racy and interesting monologues on thing in general; Arjay Davies, president of the Tri-State Wholesale Grocers' Association, who spoke of the relation between the two organizations; Public Service Commissioner M. J. Ryan, who represented the Governor of Pennsylvania, and who eulogized both his hosts and Governor Brumbaugh, Commissioner Foust and others.

Robert Stewart, retiring president, made a distinct hit as toastmaster. Robert is a quiet chap, whom one doesn't think of at once in connection with such affairs, but he was right there with the goods, presided ably and composedly, and his little speech in opening the programme was a gem.

Alum Can Go in Pickles in Kansas Now.

Kansas has modified its food regulations to permit the use of alum in pickles. Under the present situation Kansas merely acquiesces in the Federal regulations, which permits the use of alum up to one-tenth of one per cent., in preserving pickles instead of prohibiting it absolutely.

For the Serious Consideration of all Retail Grocers

From various sources of information we learn that at this winter's session of the Legislature, in several States, bills may be offered which would seriously affect all methods of premium-giving. In fact, if such bills were to be passed, all manufacturers packing their own coupons and giving their own premiums would be prevented from employing this method of advertising.

We do not believe the retail grocers wish or have any intention of endorsing bills of this kind and we ask that you carefully consider any proposed legislation before endorsing a bill which would prevent the manufacturer from offering his own coupons.

A premium coupon packed by the manufacturer and redeemed by the manufacturer direct from the consumer costs the retailer nothing. It causes him no annoyance but helps him sell goods, as the coupons are of intrinsic value to the consumer.

There are different methods of premium-giving and it would be a detriment to your business, unjust to your customers and unfair to the manufacturer to have bills passed which, while intended only to affect certain methods, would prohibit all branches of this great profit-sharing mode of advertising.

Therefore, be sure you thoroughly understand the real issues before endorsing any anti-coupon measure

Whereas, The use of well-known articles as cut-price advertising bait to sell unidentified, anonymous goods causes many small stores to quit handling such well-known articles and thereby drives them from the market or makes it difficult for housewives to obtain them through usual, convenient channels; and Coffee roasting concerns from New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Ohio, numbering about 25, held a meeting at the Republican Club, in this city, during the week, to discuss the crisis which they are facing by reason of the very heavy increases in the cost of manufacture, packing and marketing of bulk and package roasted coffee. The purpose of the conference was to find some plan by which the expenses of the business could be scientifically reduced. Resolutions were adopted which will be mailed to coffee roasters throughout the United States. The substance of these was that many coffee roasters are not adequately posted about their costs of doing business, and therefore do not know what profit is made. The resolution urged the members, in the interests of the consumer as well as of the coffee roaster, that "all coffee roasters inquire into and study with great care the costs of the various items entering into the cost of manufacturing, packing and distributing coffee in order that each roaster may know the true relation between his cost and the selling prices and determine for himself with accuracy at what prices he can afford to sell with justice to himself and the consumer."

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles — hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

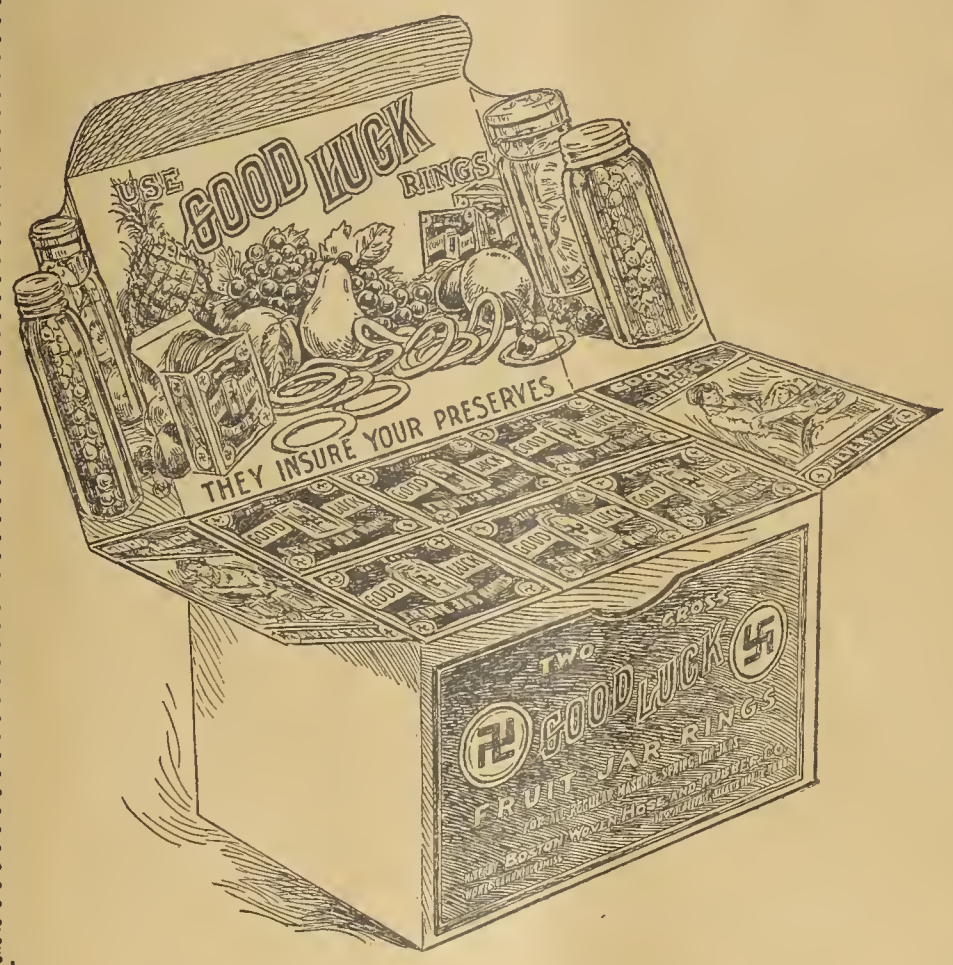
Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.



Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

A Good Scheme to Sell Good Jar Rings

A good live grocer that we know said he could sell twice as many jar rings if he sat the box on the counter as he would if he put it on the shelf.

That idea is back of the display container shown above, which talks Good Luck Jar Rings every minute with its silent but effective tongue.

See that line on the front of the lid: "They Insure Your Preserves." We pride ourselves on that line—it contains the whole story of Good Luck Jar Rings, which are made only of good live rubber and live a year without the slightest impairment of their resilience. No jar of fruit, properly sealed with a Good Luck Jar Ring, will ever go wrong because the ring went back.

You can handle cheaper jar rings, but you are very, very careless if you do.

A customer of mine told me to go back to his office one day last week to wait for him till he got through some business. I noticed that his face was red as fire, but I thought maybe it was only because he'd put on his red flannel panties that day for the first. I went back and in a little while he come.

"Codlam him to everlasting mell!" he said as soon as he got in the door. "Blast the little blank of a blank!"

"You win," I said, "that's better'n I can do. And I'm pretty good, too. What's the idea?"

"Holy mell!" he went on, "if I wouldn't like to turn that little devil up and go at him with a lath with a nail in the end! Blanketty blank his little soul to mell! I'd give a thousand dollars to get at him!"

"Look a here!" I said, "you ain't meaning me, are you? Because if you are, by gravy, I'll—"

"Oh shut up!" he said, "I'm not thinking of you. I don't even know you're here! I'm simply unloading my feelings about the biggest pest on earth! Codlam him, I say!"

"If you'd feel better to tell a real gentleman what it's all about," I said, "I'll be the gentleman, but I'll have to ask you to be more ladylike in your talk. I ain't used to hearing anybody talk that way but meself."

"My Lord!" he said, "I don't know what to do about it! He'll put me in the insane asylum if I have to stand it much longer! Holy smokes!"

"Say, you ain't talking about William Jennings Bryan, are you?" I said, trying to be sociable.

"Oh go to mell!" he said, "I don't want to hear any jokes!"

When he'd wiped his face and cooled off a bit he went on:—

"I'm talking about a miserable boy named Tommy Morgan," he said. "The son of one of the best customers I've got. She's a widow with all kinds of money, and she thinks he's an angel. I can't afford to lose her trade, for she can switch some besides her own, and I have to stand things from young Tommy that near drive me crazy.

"He's twelve years old and he'll be hung before he's dead (I let this pass) as sure as you live! I hope so anyway. He does such blame fool things! This morning he came in here with an order from his mother, and he hadn't been in the store five minutes before he opened up the cheese safe and dug about a quarter of a pound right out of the cut side with his fingers. I can't be watching him all the time!"

"Well, charge it to his mother," I said.

"I tried that once," he said, "and she called me up about it and got mad as blazes when I told her what it was. Said she wouldn't pay it—it was up to me to keep him from taking things. All right, I said, I will in future. The very next day he came in again and started to steal an apple. I nailed him and made him put it back. He wouldn't do it right away and I took hold of his arm. Then he went home and told his mother I'd hit him. She called me up again and was even madder than the first time. So now I have to take it. He's the meanest, most vicious little hyena that ever lived! He's had it in for me ever since I made him put that apple back, and the other day he upset two baskets of sweet potatoes that I had on the outside of the store. I know it was him—I saw him around the store the minute before. And steal—he'll steal anything! Last month I had a demonstrator in here for ——— pancake flour. She was baking little cakes and giving them out. He came in the store and worried her till she gave him six. Six! Then when she wouldn't give him any more he pulled down a pile of packages all over the floor and ran out! Wretched little louse! Why he'll put me out of business if he keeps on! I'll sell out just so I can wait for him some night and take him up an alley!"

You ain't got any idea how that man was worked up about that. Honest, he looked like he'd have apoplexy. It's my hunch something'll happen to him if he has to stand much more. Of course there's others. I'll bet every man that reads this could tell a tale about some of his customers' kids that think they own the store just because their mother buys goods there. It's something all of us have got to stand. Even me. I used to have a customer—he's went out of business now—that used to take me upstairs every time I went there to see his new baby. I figured out both him and his wife must have had colds in their heads all the time. For they couldn't seem to smell a thing. I could, though. The kid was only six months old, but he smelled like he was sixty. Just plumb dirty. I suppose they kept him down to one didy a week, and I must always have got in to see him on the last day. Well, I had to stand that because his father bought goods off me. We all have to stand it—it's one of the ways all of us are cowards.

But it ain't always so bad as the case of Tommy Morgan. I know what I'd do—I'd pay some roughneck to capture Tommy some time and take him out where nobody could hear yell, and then give him his medicine.

To earn his money the ro neck would have to fix To so he'd have to sit down o chest for at least a week. I' him how.

This comes because in many cases because the country printer has such a hard time to get along that he can't afford to buy new type. This is hard on him of course, but harder on the advertiser because his advertising is robbed of efficiency by it. I heard of a country grocer the other day who is somewhat of a student in advertising, and who has had a stand-up fight with his local printer about advertising for a long time. Finally he spent about $35 for new type himself, taking the advice of an advertising man whom he knew, and the printer now uses that type on his advertising only. I saw some of it the other day, and if it hadn't been pasted in a scrap book I would have taken some of it along and reproduced it here. It stood out from the advertising page like a sign post. The type used was a series (large and small letters in the same style) of a plain, open, fairly black face, and in appearance this particular advertisement was so far ahead of every other advertisement on the page as electric light is brighter than a candle. It was a fine investment.

I asked an advertising expert a question the other day which will interest the readers of this department. He has been in the advertising business for about eighteen years, and has paid particular attention to the reasons why some advertising does not pull. The advertising business is full of surprises like this. Somebody who is believed to know his business carefully and competently prepares an advertisement, and it is placed in the medium which apparently is best adapted for it, and the advertiser sits down to wait. Nothing happens—the advertisement is a frost, and everybody has a different reason for it. This particular expert has devoted a lot of attention to studying why this happens. I asked him what he considered the most likely reason in the greatest number of cases, and he said "undoubtedly poor type display. The advertisement is stillborn. Instead of speaking in a loud, clear voice, it pipes out its little message in a weak, small voice, and nobody hears it. Bad type, wrongly combined, is responsible for this in a large number of cases." I commend that to the readers hereof who feel that their advertising doesn't pay.

Western Packers Triple Their Profits in 1916.

Sales of the Cudahy Packing Co. in the fiscal year ended October 28th were $133,960,966, compared with $116,162,155 the previous year, while net profits were $3,011,415, against $723,642, according to the annual report. A statement by E. A. Cudahy says that of every dollar taken in 80 cents has gone to the farmer, 7 cents to the wage-earner, 5 cents on freight, 4 cents for manufacturing and 2 cents for interest, taxes, insurance and repairs, leaving less than 2 cents as net profit.

No. 393.—A Blow at Contracts to Supply the Buyer's "Full Requirements" for a Future Period.

I am asked to discuss a case which was last week decided by the United States Court in California. It laid down the law as to a kind of contract which is in use in a great many lines of business, viz., a contract by a manufacturer or jobber to supply the buyer with whom the contract was made, with his "full requirements" of given goods for a certain period. This form of contract is common in a great many lines of business, and is used to tie up the entire business of a given customer in a particular line. Usually the seller, in order to get this sort of contract, will make concessions as to price and terms, and it has become popular both with buyer and seller. The United States Court finds this form of contract void for indefiniteness and lack of mutuality; in simpler words, because it is one-sided and calls for no definite amount of goods. The decision undoubtedly affects a very large number of similar contracts.

The contract which figured in the California case was between the Anaheim Sugar Co., a sugar refiner, and T. W. Jenkins & Co., wholesale grocers, of Seattle, Wash. It was made in June, 1914, before the war was thought of, and was destined to keep Jenkins & Co. buying all of its sugar from the Anaheim Co. for a long time ahead. The refiner agreed to supply Jenkins & Co. with "their full requirements" of sugar for the month of August, 1916, at $4.20 per bag. When August, 1916, came the market had advanced to $7.30 per bag, and it may be well be understood that the refining company began to look into its contract a little more closely to see if there wasn't some way of avoiding it. Jenkins & Co. made demand under the contract for 4,800 bags of sugar at $4.20, claiming that was their full requirements. The refining company refused to deliver 4,800 bags on the ground that the contract was null and void, and Jenkins & Co. sued for $13,020, the difference between $4.20 and $7.30 on the amount not delivered. The court now decides that the contract is bad, and the refining company need not pay anything.

I take the liberty of wondering whether the refining company would have considered the contract null and void if the market had gone down instead of up.

The court decides that the contract cannot be enforced because it does not involve the mutuality and the definiteness which the law requires. Mutuality is the quality by which both parties have to do something. If under a contract only one party is to do something, it is void for want of mutuality. Thus, if A, an employer, makes B, his employee, sign a contract agreeing to work for A for one year, without the right to quit even on notice, but includes a provision by which he, A, can discharge B any time he likes, the contract—as to that part of it—would be void for lack of mutuality. Definiteness in a contract means certainty—as to date, parties, terms, duration and quantity of whatever is covered.

The court's reasoning in throwing this contract out was pretty convincing. It said that the agreement merely stipulated that the sugar company should deliver to the jobbing company, and the latter should accept, all of the latter's sugar requirements for August, 1916. As a matter of fact, says the court, the Jenkins Co., when the contract was made in June, 1914, had no "requirements" for August, 1916, for whether they should sell any sugar depended on the price they should a they asked one price the sell an unlimited amount o and if they asked anoth they would sell practical So the contract cove definite quantity whatev was bad both because it mutuality, and because entirely indefinite as to A contract above everythi be definite. If I agree in to sell somebody "musli fail to say how much mu contract is not worth the is written on.

The crux of the case, v I see it, strikes down many contracts of this cla ruling of the court that

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. Sweeney, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Do You Miss Anybody?—Customers will drop away. They do, I know, in the best regulated stores. It's your duty to report every missing customer. Sometimes the firm will write her a letter. Often the fellow who reports will be asked to go and see her. It's a feather in your cap to reclaim a customer. And you shouldn't be backward in letting her know it. Get her back if she's worth getting back! That's your mission. That's good, effective work. Some women like to be noticed. They like to know that their patronage is important to the general success of the business. It's a good impression to give. A woman of this stamp is a good advertiser. Being self-centered, she'll talk of your personal attention. She'll speak of the interest the firm has in good customers. So, I say, keep after good customers that are missing. There should be no excuse to lose a regular customer. The danger is in delaying and allowing her to get in friendly relations with the other concern.

When a Price Drops,—Especially on a thing like eggs or a thing like butter, tell it. To be sure, the boss may for a few days be a loser, but it shows you're there with the market price at the market time, and that's a wonderfully good name to get.

Keep Above the "Knocker."—The knocker is a coward. Sometimes he has ability; sometimes you'll find him a worker, but one thing you'll always find him to be—a coward. At one of our clerk meetings I said: "Gentlemen, there's to be no knocking in this concern except right at these meetings, face to face with the subject of your grievance." Boys, act above the knocker. Face your man in a manly wa it out. It will give you self r it will instill respect from otl help the miserable knocker- that smiles with his lips wh smeared with poison. Makir is tonic for him. Learn to fearful habit. Act the man fellow worker.

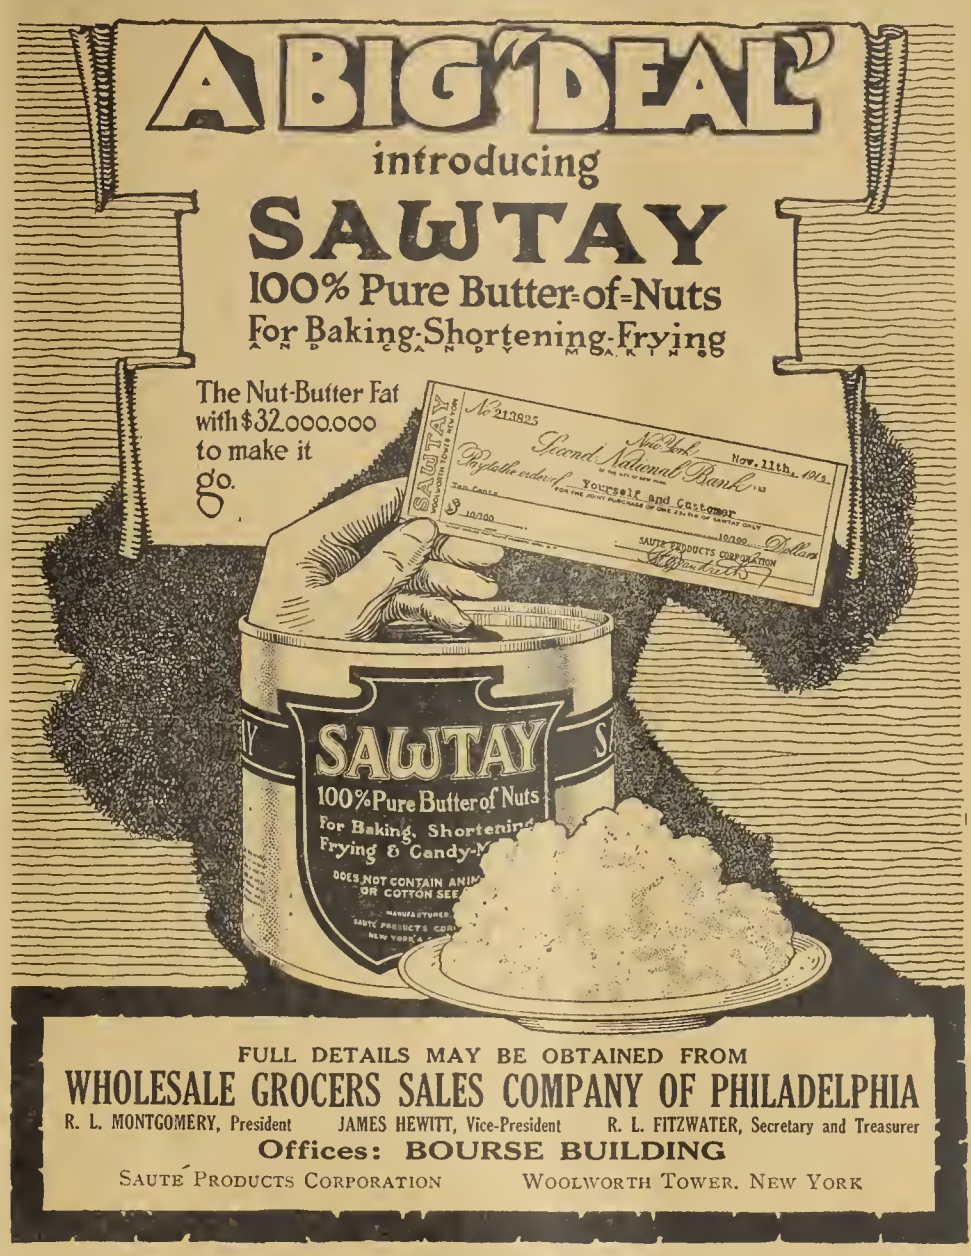
buyer buys to sell again (which as I have explained, means that his requirements for a future period cannot possibly be foretold as they depend on price and other things), the contract under which he buys is null and void unless a definite quantity is named. "Full requirements for August, 1916," means nothing. "Four thousand bags to be shipped during the month of August, 1916," would have meant something, and would undoubtedly have been upheld, because such contracts always have been upheld.

It doesn't seem to be possible, when this definiteness is lacking in the contract, to supply it by outside evidence either. In this case Jenkins & Co. offered to prove that their full requirements for August, 1916, were 4,800 bags, and therefore the contract required the sugar company to deliver that much. The court rejected this evidence on the ground that a contract has to be complete is the beginning.



It is interesting that in this case the sugar company in an effort to satisfy Jenkins & Co. actually delivered 600 bags at $4.20. Jenkins & Co. were not satisfied but wanted 4,800, and sued for the other 4,200. The court decides that the sugar company needn't have delivered even the 600 bags.

Perhaps I do not need to state the moral again, but I will restate it so that it cannot possibly be missed: Do not contract to buy—if you want the goods—"full requirements" for any future period without stating what those full requirements will be.

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

Isn't There a Lot of Truth in this?

We would hardly go as far as to say that the specialty concerns who use the specialty stamp on their orders are better than the concerns who don't; and yet they are certainly more progressive. And they are doing better by the retailer than the others, because they are doing something which will insure the proper treatment of your order.

The concerns that don't use the stamp leave you to get your order the best way you can, knowing all the time the way the jobber will probably treat it.

The best way is not to sign any specialty order unless it bears a specialty stamp.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Business has reached the point where there really isn't time to do much pushing for unknown brands. Everybody wants the advertised brands, and any grocer is justified in saying to a manufacturer of an unknown brand: "I really haven't time to argue with customers that they ought to buy your brand, which they never heard of, instead of the advertised brand that they came in here to get."

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

ESTABLISHED 1885

VOL. LXII. PHILADELPHIA, December 18, 1916. No. 25

UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA LIBRARY
DEC 18 1916

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" wishes every one of its readers all the Christmas business and all the Christmas profit that he deserves to have.

Looks as if the Philadelphia Wholesale Grocers' League Was Going to Be a Powerful Factor in Distributing Trademark Goods. The Plan and Its Results So Far.

Toronto (Ont.) Retail Grocers' Association, to Meet Cut-Throat Department Store Competition, Adopted a Private Brand of Its Own, the R. M. A. Brand, for Soap, Tea, Rolled Oats and Other Things.

Official Tomato Pack Figures Show No Warrant for Present Extortionate Prices. 1916 Pack Over 13,000,000 Cases.

There Is No Real Substitute for Gorton's Codfish

¶ Codfish is high this year, and you will doubtless be offered substitutes for codfish.

¶ The substitutes will probably be wholesome and all right, but they will not be comparable with pure codfish —Gorton's Codfish particularly.

¶ Gorton's Codfish is the finest, purest codfish packed. Like all of the Gorton fish products, it is as fine as it can be made. Millions of the fish-country people, New England, will have nothing else. You will find your customers will settle down on this for the whole winter, once you get them started on it.

Gorton-Pew Fisheries Company
Gloucester, Mass.

Building a Better Business

By sticking to the things that are true and tried—the things that have established themselves in public favor through honest value—has established itself in a million homes as the cleanest, purest, most nutritious of all cereal foods. Get in touch with the home and you will keep a fresh stock of Shredded Wheat always on hand.

Shredded Wheat

The Biscuit is packed in odorless spruce wood cases which may be easily sold for 10 or 15 cents, thereby adding to the grocer's profits.

Made only by The Shredded Wheat Co., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Say to Your Customers USE

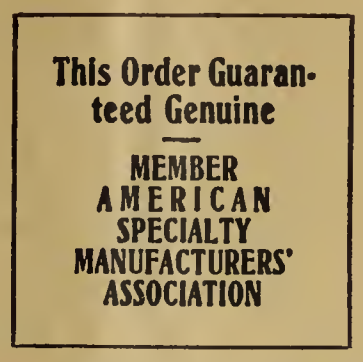
And Save Money on your Milk Bills

Mr. Grocer:—Why not be a milkman, too? You can be the biggest milkman in your neighborhood if you tell your customers to add two cans of cold water to one tall can of HIRES GOLD MILK, and then use on the table for drinking and in the kitchen for cooking.

EVERY CAN GUARANTEED BY



Hires Condensed Milk Company
10 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Everybody Knows Them

KNIGHT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS have been pleasing epicures throughout the United States for fifty-nine years. The name Knight on an extract package is a stamp of excellence. Thousands of families can be induced to use nothing else. Most grocers sell them; if you don't, do so now and you will find that the goods not only sell themselves, but that your extract trade will increase. You cannot make a better profit on any first-class brand.

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

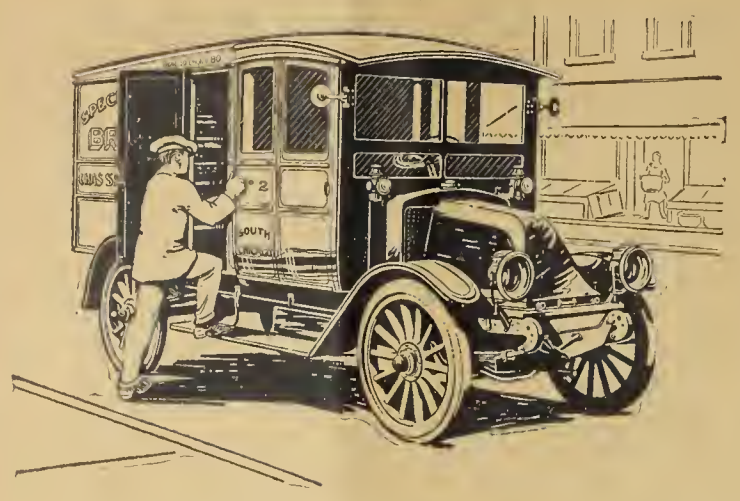
Four Months, Just Think of it!

Listen to this little story of a case which shows what used to happen to specialty orders before the best manufacturers started to guarantee them to the jobber by putting on the specialty stamp:—



A certain retailer signed a specialty order, to go through a certain jobber. It wasn't delivered and after a long time somebody remembered about it and looked it up. It had remained in the jobber's store unfilled for four months.

What a tangle that was. The manufacturer was deprived of the legitimate results of his investment; the salesman who got the order had his work set at naught, the jobber didn't get his profit on the order, and the retailer didn't get his goods.

Those things are not happening now, thanks to the specialty stamp (either of the above).

The Philadelphia Wholesale Grocers Sales Co. Seems to Be a Force to Be Reckoned With

This Movement Hardly More Than a Year Old Has Made Some Big Killings in Distributing Merchandise. Sawtay the Greatest Example. Also Has Educational Plans for Retailers.

It appears as if the recently organized Philadelphia Wholesale Grocers' Sales Co. was destined to constitute a decidedly important force in the distribution of merchandise in and around Philadelphia. The Philadelphia Wholesale Grocers' Sales Co. is the first co-operative buying association among wholesale grocers in the United States, so far as we know. It is not alone a co-operative buying association, however, for it has plans for aiding retail grocers in the scientific and economic distribution of merchandise which entitle it to be considered an educational movement.

The Sales Company is the growth of not much more than a year. In the beginning a few jobbers met together to see if they could discover some method by which they could secure a more economical method of purchasing and distributing merchandise. The suggestion came: Why not combine and purchase food products in such quantities as to secure the advantages of lower freight rates and lower prices, and combine the great selling force they controlled and give the advantages to the retail grocer? This idea has been applied in a number of cases since, and the results closely watched. They have been without doubt remarkable. The Sales Company placed a new cereal, Purity Oats, on the market, and gave it large local distribution. It took hold of Wesson's Cooking Oil and increased its business tenfold in less than a year's time. It increased the distribution of Clean Easy Soap in Philadelphia 200 per cent. and of Babbitt's Cleanser 100 per cent. Before the organization of the Sales Company scarcely any of the twenty-two grocers did much with S. and S. Beverages. Since the organization the force and selling power of the united firms has made this particular line jump from nothing to 7,500 cases. In 1914 and 1915 there were marketed only 175 cases of Randal's Grape Juice. The record for 1916 will pass 6,000 cases. The company has increased the sale of Wilbur's Cocoa 100 per cent. and of Mason's Dressing 300 per cent.

Perhaps the most remarkable showing has been on the new Sawtay, a cooking compound with many advantages. The Saute Products Co., which wished to enter the Philadelphia market, picked out the Wholesale Grocers' Sales Co. as a medium, and action quickly followed. At a dinner given by the members of the Sales Company to their salesmen, Mr. Bayer, of the Saute Co., furnished the selling points on Sawtay. The Sales Co. started a five day campaign on November 20th; the sales were reported each day with the following surprising record:—

Monday, November 20th, 2,717.
Tuesday, November 21st, 1,534.
Wednesday, Nov. 22d, 1,457.
Thursday, November 23d, 1,059.
Friday, November 24th, 1,174.
Total, 7,941.

The first order placed by the Sales Co. for Sawtay was a trainload of 12,000 cases for a product that was not even in the market before.

The territory covered by the Wholesale Grocers' Sales Company reaches for 150 miles around Philadelphia. Only merchandise of reliable character is taken hold of by the organization and care is taken that everything sold conforms to Pennsylvania's pure food laws.

The Sales Company also stands for education of the independent retail grocer and is constantly trying to help him by suggestions as to more modern and up-to-date business methods, window displays and proper handling of merchandise. It is the desire of the organization to promote good fellowship between the retail grocer and his jobber, thus placing the personally conducted grocery store in a position to more successfully resist the inroads of the strenuous competition with which he is surrounded.

Members of the Sales Company meet weekly. New goods coming on the market are shown and discussed and their market value determined. At times this weekly meeting is addressed by representatives of some food manufacturer who is especially interested in the Philadelphia distribution of his product.

The membership of the Sales Co. is as follows: Comly, Flanigen & Co., James Crawford, George R. Danenhower & Son, Frank Lee Dickinson & Co., James Gillespie & Son, Jonathan Graham & Son Co., William J. Graham & Co., Halpen, Green & Co., Samuel Howell, H. Kellogg & Sons, H. K. Kindig & Co., Kirk, Foster & Co., Lippincott & Co., Alfred Lowry & Bro., William Montgomery & Co., John Price & Co., Reeves, Parvin & Co., John Scott & Co., Inc., Samuel R. Sharp Co., Inc., Charles Shaw & Son, J. Frank Shull Co., Wilson & Richards.

Official Figures Show Present Tomato Prices May Be a Pure Squeeze by Somebody.

National Canners' Association Says 1916 Pack Was Somewhat Over 13,000,000 Cases Against Eight and a Half Million Cases Last Year. Corn Pack About a Million Less.

The National Canners' Association issued its statistics during the week covering the 1916 packs of tomatoes, corn and peas. This paper's forecast of the tomato pack, 13,000,000 cases, proved practically correct. The pack was nearly 5,000,000 cases more than in 1915. The corn pack was 9,130,000 cases, against 10,124,124 last year, not such a falling off as would justify the present very high prices. The pea pack was 6,686,000 cases, against 9,272,000 last year. These figures were published last September.

Following are the tomato pack figures:—

onto Retail Grocers' Association, Faced With Cut-Price Competition, Which Its Members Could Not Meet, Adopted the R. M. A. Brand as Its Private Brand. Started With Soap and Now Packs Several Other Things. Can Undersell the Advertised Soaps.

he Retail Grocers' Association oronto, Ont., think they have en around the cutter by estab- ng a private brand of their own, R. M. A. brand, under which pack soap, tea, rolled oats, e sauce, soap powder, cleanser a cigar. All of the members being educated to push the M. A. goods, and the business already amounts to something. he start was made on soap. manufacturers of soaps and of nsers did not prevent price- ing of their advertised products he Toronto department stores, Toronto retailers put on the ket their own private brand. s step was taken after negotia- s with the manufacturers had ed. While the retailers main- that they were unfairly treated, manufacturers contend that the onto grocers asked for conces- s which it was impossible to nt.

he Toronto retailers had to pete with two giant department es, both of which were using r grocery sections as "feature artments." These stores sold well-known brands of laundry , for example, at 4 cents per and thus practically monopo- l the trade, as the retailers had uy in 50-case lots to get a price $3.85. This price was impossi- If the retailer sold for 4 cents would make only 15 cents gross 100 bars, or less than 4 per cent. sales. Fifty cases would last average grocer about a year. e retailer could not afford to continue selling these soaps, as t would throw too much trade other commodities to the depart- nt stores.

To meet this competition the Toronto Grocers' Association approached a soap manufacturer to put up "R. M. A." brand. The price secured allowed the retailers to put two ounces more soap into each cake and still get a good margin of profit when sold at the popular price of "six for a quarter."

The success of the "R. M. A." soap encouraged the retailers to promote other private brands, and to-day soap, tea, rolled oats, Worcestershire sauce, soap powder, cleansers, and a cigar, are all being sold under the "R. M. A." label. Negotiations are under way to add more lines to this list. These goods are handled in a systematic manner by the association. The manufacturer is asked to pack the private brand at a certain price and give a guarantee that only association members may purchase this brand. In return for this the association agrees to buy exclusively from the manufacturer as long as the agreement is in force. The association then gets after its members and boosts the "R. M. A." brand, secures their orders and clears them through to the manufacturer, who opens individual accounts with each purchaser. The manufacturer is furnished with a list of the association members and is urged to solicit direct, and thus support the work of the association's committee.

Have You Noticed That We Don't Advertise Prices?

¶ During all the time we have been advertising Harisco Standardized Coffees in this paper we haven't quoted a price. Why? Because one of the ideas of Harisco Standardized Coffees is special coffees for special needs. Every coffee on the standardized list was devised with some particular purpose in mind, and quoting any one of them in a general advertisement might be confusing and get away from the main idea.

¶ Before we sell you coffee we like to get in touch with your wants, so we can sell you something that will help you sell more coffee. We aren't just coffee dealers, we are coffee specialists. We can help you get your trade back if you've lost it.

¶ Let us say again that one of the big things about Harisco Standardized Coffees is the fact that they stay uniform forever.

WITH THE EDITOR

He Never Said It.

Mr. Leon S. Hattenbach, secretary of the Colorado Retail Merchants' Association, has just been elected State Senator from Denver. A Denver paper quotes the distinguished Senator-elect as follows:—

> It costs the average American consumer twice as much to live to-day as it did a year ago, and it costs the retailer twice as much to do business to-day as it did then. The grocer's profits, however, are smaller, if anything, this year, and his capital will go only one-half as far as it did twelve months ago.

I feel quite sure that Senator Hattenbach never said that, for it isn't true. Neither consumers' nor storekeepers' expenses have doubled in one year. Senator Hattenbach now begins to find out what other great men have found out before him: that the only way to be accurately quoted in the newspapers is to write it out yourself.

Get Back in the Corner, Connelly.

The following dispatch from Chicago appeared in Eastern newspapers during the week:—

TO DISCIPLINE SPECULATORS.

GROCERS' ASSOCIATION TO DISCUSS PLAN AND ALSO EMBARGO.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—Means of disciplining speculators if any are found in current investigations to have conspired to raise food prices will be considered to-morrow at a meeting of the executive board of the National Retail Grocers' Association, it was announced to-night by Frank B. Connolly, vice-president of the association of San Francisco.

The discipline, Mr. Connolly said, was likely to take the form of a boycott. He also said he would urge the board to adopt resolutions favoring an embargo on wheat, flour, sugar, milk and canned tomatoes. In the event the resolutions are adopted, he said, the association would send a committee to Washington to work for an embargo.

My advice to Mr. Connolly is to keep out of the association limelight for a while, and my advice to the National Association of Retail Grocers is to force Mr. Connolly to do that if he won't do it of his own free will. As he probably will not.

The reason is that Mr. Connolly recently confessed in writing that he had told a particularly mean lie about George H. Schulte, of St. Louis. If a self-confessed liar hasn't the decency to keep in the background until people have forgotten his offense, he ought to be forcibly pushed there.

A Remarkable Example of Stability in Advertised Goods.

One big thing about nationally advertised products is their stability. In the beginning the manufacturer fixes a price that he thinks will cover all reasonable advances in the raw material market, and he holds to that as long as he can. It takes a phenomenal market condition to make that price advance.

Take Quaker Oats, a well-known advertised brand. The Quaker Oats Co. is paying almost twice as much for its raw oats to-day as it paid a few months ago, yet Quaker Oats have not advanced and probably will not. I have reason to believe that every case of Quaker Oats sold to-day, if made from oats selling on to-day's market, will net the manufacturer a loss. Yet so solidly has the brand been established as a 10-cent seller that the manufacturer will take a loss before he will advance it.

Contrast this with the so-called competitive brands of rolled oats made by the same company. These are not advertised, and are sold wherever local conditions provide an opening. They are good oats but not the best. Usually these brands rule from 25 to 40 cents a case below the price of Quaker Oats, but being unknown, they did not have the same reason to stay down that Quaker Oats had, and so they went up. Some of these brands are selling to-day at 10 cents a case above Quaker Oats.

Stability is a good thing both for consumer and the trade.

The Unique Canned Tomato Situation.

One of the most interesting conditions in the grocery business to-day surrounds canned tomatoes. While men who know strenuously deny that there has been any speculation, many contend that the present situation can hardly be explained on any other ground.

In 1915 the tomato pack was about eight and a half million cases and the price never got above $1.05. In 1916 the pack was along known to be not less 13,000,000 cases and in full kn edge of that the price rec reached $1.40 and even no $1.20. How can this be explai Well, it could happen if somet unusual had largely increased consumptive demand. But th not the case. Retailers bought well this year, but enough to account for the pr situation. And of course it c happen if somebody had boug lot of tomatoes and put them a If that has happened nobody k of it. There is much reason t lieve that everybody in the gr business, jobber and retaile gether, is well stocked, and tha aggregate of these stocks mak the bulk of the 13,000,000 pack the packers have very little If that is true, the high prices been achieved not by reaso speculation or by reason of radical increase in the demand simply by the general upward m ment in all merchandise and b fact that nobody is pressing g for sale.

Something else should be It is perhaps unfair to compar 1915 market with the present ket, for in 1915 the cost of p ing was probably 20 cents a d less than it will be in 1917. tures were 80 cents then; to nobody thinks of quoting less $1, and some packers think the ought to be $1.25. Therefore present spot price, when comp with the future price, which all is not an unreasonable com son, does not appear so high all.

This Man Hopes Cost of Living Will Go Higher.

Says Some Trade Abuses Won't Be Cured Until Prices Get Even Higher Than Now. Useless Expense Must Be Eliminated.

In my humble opinion the present high cost of living is the best thing that ever happened to this country and I believe prices will go higher before they become less, and the higher they go the better for all concerned. In saying this I am not unmindful of the suffering this will cause, but unfortunately, it seems that human progress can only be purchased through sacrifice.

The middleman is frequently blamed as the cause for high prices, just as is the speculator. In neither case is the criticism well founded. Upon investigation the speculator loses more often than he profits. When he loses and sells his products below cost as he did last year, the public naturally does not take up a purse for his benefit. If the middleman incurs costs in the transaction of his business of gathering together and distribution of food products from local centres and abroad he cannot be censured for including these costs in the price. Competition will see that his profits are only commensurate with the service he renders. Bear in mind, however, that the handling cost, like taxes, cannot be dodged but must be borne, and all are in the same dilemma, and the publ the end pays for this waste and less and unnecessary expense.

Judging from past performa the public will continue to be different until the load becomes heavy to be borne. That is wh hope living costs will go hig The pinch of the dollar can do n than all the talk in the world orm Needed in Coffee Business. Egg Men Start to Defend Themselves. Can Situation Critical. Market Summary.

al Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, December 15, 1916.

ıere has been considerable discus- during the week among the coffee ting trade over the results of the ing on December 6th, which was ly reported in this correspondence week. As stated before, the pur- of the meeting was to meet the ecedented increase in the costs of ufacturing, packing and marketing bulk and package coffee by im- ing the conditions under which the ters of the United States calcu- l their costs. The position with the ters is that a great many roasters packers of coffee know nothing it how to calculate their costs and underselling the market, in the be- that they are making a profit, reas the fact is their cost is much er than they think it is and they actually making a loss. A discus- at the meeting drew out the fact there is a very wide variation in manner in which the costs systems arious roasters were conducted. It established that a great many ar- s in common use are being sold by ers at less than cost.

. L. Auerback obtained judgment ng the week against the All Pack- Grocery Stores Co. for goods sold delivered, amounting to $605.52.

he egg men of the city are rallying heir own defense. The denuncia- of egg speculators has been so e in the local papers, owing to the high prices, that the New York cantile Exchange issued a circular nembers during the week, a portion which was as follows:—

The attacks now being made gainst our Exchange and the in- vidual members thereof by cer- in public officials, upon the false sumption that our practices are sponsible for the present high cost the foods which we handle, and at we are guilty of fraud and de- ption in the conduct of our busi- ess, have reached such a stage that is time we took issue with these ficials in order that the public ould not further be deceived.

These false charges, brought to ur attention through various news- aper articles, are couched, as we elieve, purposely and apparently in ich broad and general terms as nder ordinary circumstances to revent us from bringing the matter o an immediate issue and thereby rotect our business from irrepara- le injury. We are charged with eing criminals engaged in illegal ractices and hoodwinking the pub- c; we are threatened with prosecu- ons and practical annihilation; ut nowhere is any name mentioned r specific charges cited. Therefore e can take the matter up only in a eneral way.

We are advised by counsel that in ieir opinion the rules laid down by he Health Department are consistent with the Cold Storage Law; and we believe they are ample to fully protect the health of the community and prevent fraud and deception on the public in the sale of cold storage eggs. We are further advised that in issuing his order to stamp the words "cold storage" on each egg, Commissoner Dillon has exceeded the authority conferred upon him by law.

It is high time there was a showdown, that we had a hearing, so that the atmosphere might be clarified and the public no longer deceived. Some action, therefore, should be adopted by us, and in closing, let me suggest that in talking to your fellow merchants, call their attention to the requirements of the Cold Storage Law which demands that there shall be no evasion on their part in selling articles of food that have been kept in cold storage, and no sales without representing the goods to have been so kept. In our opinion, the rules of Dr. Biggs amply meet the case, but when you go further, as I understand we are, by placing cold storage notices in such boxes or baskets as may contain loose eggs in bulk for sale, you are only doing what every honest dealer should do.

I, therefore, suggest that we take appropriate action without delay, so that the matter may be settled once and for all.

Touching the new egg situation, a committee of the New York Mercantile Exchange will shortly begin a civil action against Commissioner Dillon to question his right to make the ruling, which he recently made, that every cold storage egg sold out of its original package must have its character stamped upon the shell.

* * *

Packers are interested in the fact that the American Can Co., which had already announced very radical advances in the prices of the cans in which fruits and vegetables are packed, withdrew all prices on Thursday last. It is expected that many of the packers will either refrain from naming future prices now, or if they have named them, will withdraw them until the can situation is settled.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Giving Samples.—Do you know there's an art in disposing of samples? I was never much in favor of throwing them into the order box. Handing one to a customer, along with a word or two about the goods, is better. It suggests importance. It associates more directly the store with the goods. The impression is good. Handing the thing out is more of a complimentary affair. The fact that it has to be carried home, and in a measure taken care of, along with your apparent consideration, gives it weight. Make the most of samples. They cost you nothing.

Strong Coffee.—Don't you often have a call for "strong coffee"? Are they all satisfied with your nice mild Maracaibo or Bogota? Maybe you're losing lots of coffee trade because yours hasn't "grip" enough. Men, especially working men, like "stimulant" coffee. Easy enough to hit such a taste. The important thing is to do it, and "do it now." It's only one of those out-of-the-common things that you should do. These articles are written largely to get the celrk out of the rut. What the man ahead of you did was good enough, of course, but are you going to lie down on his ideas? Life is progress. Don't care whether your store is fifty miles in the country or in the middle of Broadway, New York. The knack of hitting her in coffee applies in both locations. Believe me, any number of men are driven to drink the rank package coffee because you study their tastes.

This Man Wants to Market a Washing Tablet.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 11, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am making a washing tablet of superior merit, but am not in position to place it on the open market. Would like to get in touch with some parties or firm with whom I could possibly arrange to handle the article for me. Would put it up under any brand desired.

I am writing you for the reason that I have been a subscriber to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for many years while in business for myself, and thinking perhaps you would be in position to put me in touch with some firms that might be interested in a matter of this kind. If so, I will appreciate it very much.

Business Fine for General Stores.

November Record Shows Still Further Falling Off in General Store Failures. All Other Lines Show Reductions Also, But Not as Much.

Figures from the Dun Mercantile Agency showing commercial failures for November continue to show a remarkable and wholly unexplained falling off in general store failures. Also, this time there is a slight falling off in grocery failures, which have been showing an increase lately. In every other line there was also a falling off, as compared with November, 1915.

The figures follow:—

General Stores—November, 1916, 78; liabilities, $606,393; November, 1915, 164; liabilities, $1,401,262. November, 1916, failures were the smallest for five years.

Grocery Stores—November, 1916, 284; liabilities, $1,235,956; November, 1915, 288; liabilities, $1,204,985.

Dry Goods—November, 1916, 48; liabilities, $722,055; November, 1915, 68; liabilities, $608,313.

Shoes—November, 1916, 20; liabilities, $89,102; November, 1915, 31; liabilities, $187,101.

Hardware—November, 1916, 18; liabilities, $202,517; November, 1915, 24; liabilities, $198,019.

Some Intimate Facts About Jell-O

The waxed-paper bag inside the Jell-O cartons affords absolute protection to the contents against moisture and atmospheric conditions.

It is air-proof and moisture-proof, keeping the Jell-O always pure, clean and sweet.

The Jell-O in every package is fresh, whether made yesterday or many months ago. It does not lose its flavor or grow stale.

The last package of the dozen on the grocer's shelf is as fresh and sweet as the first.

From start to finish the operation of "putting up" is an interesting one. Wonderful automatic machines perform it—each completing a package of Jell-O in two seconds—from making the waxed-paper bag and filling it with Jell-O, to putting the filled bag and a recipe folder in the carton and closing and sealing it.

JELL-O

It is all very sanitary and very satisfactory.

The seven flavors of Jell-O—all pure fruit flavors—are Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate.

No. 394.—An Employe's Right to Sell a New Employer the Business Secrets of an Old One.

While my answer to this correspondent's letter will not suit her, the question she raises will interest every reader hereof who employs clerks and has certain details of his business which he wishes to keep secret. It will also interest clerks and other employees who by reason of their employment are in position to learn those secret business details. By request I withhold both this correspondent's name and town:—

> Your articles are chiefly to employers. Will you please advise an employee. The writer is employed in a manufacturing plant in which trade secrets are prominent.
> My daily work embraces some of these processes, and by "observation" I have found out those to which I am not entrusted.
> I have signed no contract, nor is my salary above the average (nor does it seem half sufficient for the trust imposed), and prospects for much advancement are slim. Another firm will gladly hire me at 100 per cent. increase, for the formula and methods in which I am proficient. Is there any reason why I cannot engage with this firm?
> Of course I shall be obliged to hand over the formula, etc., to this new company. In that case how can I protect myself so that I cannot be discharged for any cause after the information they require is handed over? How should such a contract be worded, and are there printed forms, such as would fill my case? What are the principal clauses one should have inserted in the agreement? Of course a lawyer would be engaged if necessary, but your opinion will be greatly appreciated.

What I shall say in answer to this correspondent applies not only to her case, but to any other case where a business employer has trade or business secrets which are valuable and peculiar to his own business. I suppose there is hardly a reader of these articles who is not in that class. It applies to exclusive business secrets of any character whatever—formulas, recipes, processes, methods, names of customers, or any other information which a man is using exclusively in connection with his own business.

I am obliged to advise this correspondent that she cannot make any use whatever of her employer's formulas. The law is well settled that (I am quoting from a leading case) "a person employed by one using a secret process with knowledge that the employer is trying to keep it secret, impliedly agrees not to divulge the secret, and will be enjoined from divulging or using same to the injury of his employer."

There need not be any written contract at all. The law reasons that the relations between an employer and an employee are necessarily confidential and when an employer allows his employee access to his business secrets, the tacit understanding between them must be that the employee will respect that confidence. There are many cases on record in which employees have not respected it, however. They have gotten private information out of their employer's business and then sought to sell it to another employer. In not one case has the law failed to issue an injunction. The law of such a situation is well summed up thus:—

> Employees of one having a trade secret who are under express contract, or a contract implied from their confidential relation to their employer, not to disclose the secret, will be enjoined from divulging or using the same to the injury of their employer, whether before or after they have left their employ.

At the same time, while no written contract is necessary, I should always have one, if I were an employer. Any employer who has any secret and peculiar information about his own business, which he would hesitate to have an employee give up to a competitor, should protect himself in every possible way. The most certain way is to tie up his employees in a little contract reading something like this:—

> The party of the second part (the employee) hereby agrees to make no use whatever of any trade secrets or private information concerning the business of the party of the first part (the employer) which may be communicated to him, or which he may learn during t period of his employment wi the party of the first part, e cept in connection with sa party's business.

Occasionally the new employ whom the trade secrets of the employer are to be communic can also be prevented from u them. It is well settled that w there is a contract between an ployer and his employee, not to close a trade secret, not only the employee be enjoined from closing it, but any other empl will be enjoined from receiving utilizing the disclosure, provide had notice or knowledge of the tract.

I think I should add that the above explained applies equall former employees who seek to their former employer's secret another employer, and to those go into business for themselves seek to use them that way.

Shuman Shelf-Pricing Will Help You Make More Money in 1917.

It will make you more money by making your store more popular with more people.

It will make you more money by saving the time of your clerks, so that each clerk can make at least 25% more sales per hour, day or week.

It will make you more money by preventing mistakes in prices—and by saving the labor of marking the price on every carton, can or package.

It makes it easy to advance prices, as your costs advance; and by pricing these advances in PENNY FIGURES, instead of by 5's and 10's you will maintain your reputation for selling good goods at reasonable prices.

The Shuman System consists of metal clamps that spring onto shelf, box, crate or basket with gummed price stickers to paste on the face of the clamps.

You change prices either by shifting the clamps or by pasting new stickers on them.

Cost Very Little

One set, consisting of 50 clamps and 1110 stickers, only $3.25. Order through your jobber, if he does not carry them, we will send by parcel post prepaid on receipt of price.

Extra Clamps—$2.50 per 100. Extra Stickers—10c for 50 of a kind.

Question: Rex, Pa.—A desires to n $100 and arranges with B for amount, giving him a one year's e after date for the $100 with s an endorser (accommodation). e note is dated August 7, 1914. When the note falls due August 7, 1915, A does not pay it, and on August 14, 1915, B presents the note to C, the endorser. C instructs B to insist on A assuming the payment of the note. C hears no more about the note until December 7, 1916, one year, three months and twenty-three days after, when B files the note with a justice of the peace against C for collection. Must C assume the payment if A refuses, or, in other words, does the note hold C after such a lapse of time?

Answer.—Under the Pennsylvania law, in order to hold an endorser, you must present a note at maturity to the maker, and if it is not paid, notice to that effect must at once be given the endorser. Apparently this was not done. C was entitled to notice as soon after August 7, 1915, as was reasonably possible. If both parties were in the same town this would mean the next day. My judgment is that C was released by the failure to notify him of A's failure to pay, until August 14th.

The delay in suing on the note is not in my judgment important. B could sue either A or C, whichever he chose, and if he had properly served C with notice, he could have waited six years before bringing suit.

The Customer's Always Right.

I get up against a whole lot of stunts that make me sick, but I believe the one that makes me the sickest is this stunt that some fellows are trying to put over to storekeepers that "the customer is always right." Every time I read that I sweat blood.

I just got through reading another piece about it in the "Saturday Evening Post." There was a long talk in there that a reporter had with a man who had started in the department store business with something like forty cents, and now had forty million. He didn't give his name—because he was ashamed to, I'll bet. He said the "customer was always right" business had been the thing he'd made most of his $40,000,000 on.

A storekeeper that talks that way, and does that way, is a blamed two-face, if you ask me. The customer ain't always right, everybody knows that. If you want my opinion, I say the customer's wrong more times than he's right. And before I'd take their blame on me, if I had a store, I'd sell out and get a job in the gas office, where the customer's always wrong.

I've got a customer that feels that the customer's always right. That is, he did feel that way, up to one day last week. I don't know whether he feels so now or not—I ain't had a chance to talk to him about it since.

Him and I have had a lot of talks about this thing of handling kicks from customers. He always gave in to 'em—said that was the only way to do business. "The customer's always right." I didn't think so, and I've argued real loud with him about it a dozen times. He's been kind enough to tell me a lot of times that if I tried to keep store the way I believed, I'd bust up inside of a month.

All right, maybe I would, but I'd bust up with all me flags flying.

But all this happened before that day. On that day I made his store on one of my regular trips and was loafing around waiting for him to get through waiting on trade.

While I was in the store a woman came in from some firemen's auxiliary or something, to buy chickens for a big firemen's parade. About ten million firemen were coming from all over to have a parade and they were going to feed chicken to the whole bunch. Some order!

The woman didn't seem to want to give him the order, but she came in to do it, all the same.

"Mr. Gordon," she said, "I and a few other of the ladies on the committee were in favor of giving our order to Mr. Simpson, because his son is a member of the Good Intent Company, but the majority of the committee thought you ought to have it."

Then they started to figure the thing out, and while they were at that, another woman came in.

She had a kick, and she couldn't hold it, so she butted right in. This was on Monday, and she said the roast of beef she'd had on Sunday was so tough that she'd had to throw it away. She'd had a bunch of company, she was all feazed up and had it in for the boss.

She started to get it off as mad and loud as a hen with a tail feather pulled out. He asked her to wait a minute until he got through with the other woman, but she said somebody was waiting for her and she wouldn't wait.

That was some situation. There was the fire woman with a juicy order, hunting for some excuse, maybe, not to hand it over, and there was the other woman, butting right in with the excuse. I woke right up. If "the customer's always right" here, he'll probably lose the order.

He started to smooth her down, but she wouldn't smooth. I would have give $40 to march up and smack her old red face—she was as ugly as sin about it.

When she said after awhile that this was the steenth time she'd had trouble with that store and she wasn't going to deal there any more. he woke up and started to get into the thing. He sent for the order clerk and in five minutes he'd showed the woman was plumb wrong. She hadn't bought the roast there at all—the cook did the buying and she got it somewhere else. When they got through she was completely down and out. Didn't have a leg to stand on!

"Bully work!" I said to myself. "Go to it!"

"Now, Mrs. Jones," he said, "you said you wouldn't deal here any more; all right, I say to you that I don't want your trade. I've always had trouble with you—you're always making complaints that have nothing to them. Now please don't come in this store again—I don't want any more dealings with you."

Prettty raw for a fellow whose customer was always right, wasn't it? "Glorious, old hoss!" I said to myself. Gee, how fine I felt! It was exactly my line of talk in a case like that.

"And he's saved the big order, too," I said to myself. Wait a minute—don't jump too quick at conclusions. Remember he was dealing with women.

Mrs. Jones marched out all red and fussy without saying any more. I'd have cheerfully-gave up a week's salary to have made her walk Spanish as she went, but I'm always able to be a gent except when I've mixed grape juice and milk. When I do that I try to cut my mother's ears off.

Now listen to the woman with the big order.

"Mr. Gordon," she said, "I'm amazed at the way you talked to that lady, and before I place this order I shall present the whole ter before the ladies of the com tee again. I'm sure they wi agree with me in not wantin patronize a man who talks like to any lady."

Then she walked out, with excuse for not handing the over, all made up. I don't whether he got the order or no I'll bet a million he didn't. between ourselves, d'ye know I'd have done? I'd have gon and seen every woman on that mittee and told 'em the real

Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—Enclosed find circular which I am sending out by mail, also putting the same in two local papers. Please let me know what you think of this.

Yours respectfully,
H. E. HARSH.

Mr. Harsh's circular was printed in black on white paper 11 x 15 inches, and the reduced reproduction appears below:—

There aren't enough prices quoted on this circular in my judgment. I should have left the grocery advertisement out. It reminds people of what they already know—of what they cannot possibly forget, in fact, viz., that you sell groceries. I should have told why I was going out of the dish business. Reasons always make a reduction sale more convincing. And I should have quoted some present and former values on dishes, and made more of the advertisement altogether. A special sale of dishes just before Christmas is a thing you can make a good deal of, and I should have boomed it for all it was worth.

I don't believe I would have advertised apron and dress ginghams at all, at least not unless I advertised gift patterns or something like that. And I would have quoted prices. The same applies to rubber goods. Prices should have been quoted. "Your New Overshoes Are Here," would have been a good heading, with prices quoted. The specials are a good idea, especially with the slant about money saved for presents.

* * *

The baseball mask scheme is new. I have never seen the thing worked just that way before. I shouldn't think it would amount to much because it would so soon be over. Although the sale lasts ten days, the scheme might be all over and done with the first hour of the first day. All that is necessary to get it over by that time is for four teachers to visit the store and the gas is completely out of the balloon. I should think it would be better to prolong the effect during the whole period of the sale. Nothing seems to keep the interest up like a contest over the most popular teacher, or popular something or other. That induces rivalry among the contestants' friends and widens the thing immensely. Whereas a contest over the four who simply get to a place first doesn't bring in the friends at all.

Chain Stores Seem to be Going Ahead.

Judging from the official figures, chain stores of the United States are closing an unusually prosperous year. The S. S. Kresge Co. 5-10-cent stores reports sales $18,711,136, an increase of 2 per cent. over the same months year. The company has op nineteen new stores and now 157 in operation. The W worth chain of 5-and-10- stores reports an increase ten months sales of $8,746,69 15.33 per cent. over the s period of time in 1915. The c has been enlarged in the yea sixty new stores, and by the of next year 900 will be in o ation. McCrory's 5-and-10- stores show an increase of 1 per cent. over the business tr acted in the first ten months 1916, and sales for the full yea estimated at $6,600,000. Net e ings on each dollar's sales are pected to improve by reason efficiency methods introduced. H. Kress & Co's sales for the months show an increase of per cent. over the same period year. The full year is expecte show sales of about $14,400 The Acme Tea Co., which oper 425 stores, reports sales of $6, 367, a gain of 156.3 per cent. the four months of the fiscal y which began July 1st. The J Tea Co's sales for the ten mo amounted to $10,122,395, an crease of 57.06 per cent. over same months in 1915. The G Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., its 2,100 stores, reports sales $44,928,233 for ten months, a of 65.48 per cent. over the co sponding time of 1915.

Municipal Market Seeks to Re High Cost of Living in Evans ville, Ind.

The Municipal Market es lished in Evansville, Ind., by M Bosse to fight the high cost of did a rushing business on the day, with prices from 25 per c to a third less than asked by re ers. Mayor Bosse has been bu vegetables and supplies in car lots in Chicago, Kentucky and o places, wherever he can ob them. He also has bought and coal cheaper than the coal dea here. Prices at the Municipal M ket were: Potatoes, $1.65 a bus butter, 35 cents a pound; eggs cents a dozen. Rabbits, shi here by the hundred, have been ing rapidly at 15 cents each. articles of food purchased at Municipal Market are delivered

Java and a unchanged.

Sugar.

e sugar market has taken a slump g the week and the price for gran- l is now 7.10 to 7.15 cents. This is p of about 35 points for the week. demand is light and nobody seems ve very much confidence in the et. Raws are lower for the week, pot price being around 5½ cents, sugar for January and February ent is not much above 5 cents.

Syrup and Molasses.

cose is scarce and hard to get. ound syrup shows no change for eek, fair demand. Sugar syrup is nged, good syrup being scarce. mptive demand small. Molasses nged for the week, quiet demand e supply of shore mackerel is not large, but prices are unchanged for eek. The situation is strong. Irish erel still show an advancing ncy and small sizes are scarce. mackerel are quoted up to a barrel, which is probably $10 e normal. Cod, hake and haddock ll scarce and high. Demand mod- Salmon continues very strong. rts from the coast during the week that red Alaska was quoted out at $1.90 a dozen, in a large way, is 50 cents above the opening s. Domestic sardines continue e and high, as do the imported. e are still some French sardines in ountry which were packed in 1914, outside of these, and a few re- ing of later packs, the market is of them. Norwegian sardines are de easier as more are coming over. teen dollars a case seems to be or the best, in a large way.

Fish.

Canned Goods.

matoes are about unchanged on a of $1.25 for Maryland 3s, in a way. Demand is very quiet. Some es are being offered at $1, but packers seem to think that the should not be below $1.25. Buy- uture tomatoes is a very uncertain proposition, as the chance is that if the present prices continue, the next pack will be enormous, and undoubtedly prices will break, no matter what the cost of packing. Corn shows no change. Official figures show that the 1916 pack is only a million less than during 1915. This has not affected the market as yet. Peas are unchanged and quiet. Everything being firm. Apples are where they were a week ago. Demand quiet. California canned goods show no change and not much activity. The supply of many lines is light. Nobody seems to be interested in naming prices on futures. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged, very ragged and irregular.

Dried Fruits.

Dried fruits are rather dull and will remain so during the balance of the month. Prunes are unchanged, but steady to firm. Peaches, apricots, raisins, currants and the balance of the line are all quiet, but fairly well maintained.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are a shade easier in primary markets, although on the spot they are still selling at $6.75 per bushel, in a large way. The primary market is about 25 cents under that parity. Marrows are steady at $7.50. Demand light. California limas, green and Scotch peas are unchanged on last week's basis.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm, at an advance of 1½ to 2 cents per pound for the week, due to the good consumption and the very light receipts. Market is firm, and if there is any further change it will probably be upward. The boycott in some sections of the country had some effect on the market. but it seems now to have disappeared. The warehouse stocks are very light, as compared with the previous seasons, and the market is 4 to 5 cents above normal.

Eggs.

Owing to the cold weather, fresh eggs have advanced 3 cents during the week The market is very firm. The consumptive demand is good and the receipts light. Storage eggs are up 2 cents and show a good consumptive demand. The holdings in storage are now quite light, and the entire situation is now very firm.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with a moderate demand. There is a light supply in the Western markets, but the general feeling appears to be a little easier, and if there is any change there will probably be a slight reduction. Export demand of cheese from Eastern markets is now light.

Provisions.

The provision market is steady and unchanged from last week. Receipts

Don't Sell Unprofitable Wheat Cereals

Every grocer must sell at least one wheat cereal. Some wheat cereals actually cost him money to sell, instead of paying a profit.

Wheatena is the best wheat cereal made—the most carefully made—and has always paid the retailer a good profit. Merchandise which is at the same time good and profitable is the only kind to sell.

The Wheatena Co., Rahway, N. J.

Member of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Assoc'n appear to be normal for the season, and the consumptive demand is fair. No important change appears in sight for the balance of the year. Pure lard is steady at a decline of ¼ cent, due to the freer killing of hogs. Demand is only fair. Compound lard is steady and unchanged, with a fair consumptive demand and a weaker feeling on account of the pure lard situation. Prices of compound are still fairly high, but the general feeling is weaker. Barreled pork is unchanged and in quiet demand. Dried beef is in light demand at unchanged prices. Canned meats are steady.

Poultry.

Although the weather will have considerable to do with it, it looks now as if turkeys might rule around 29 to 31 cents during the Christmas trade. This is not materially different from the Thanksgiving prices, which got as high as 32 cents and as low, in certain localities, as 5 cents. Ducks are very dull, on a basis of 22 cents, which is low compared to the prices of other poultry. Geese are quiet at 20 to 21 cents, which is about a normal price. Chickens are in fair demand. There is a large supply of poultry of all kinds in the warehouses.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Canned Tomatoes.

Lack of demand has brought about a decline in the market on tomatoes; not that there is any glut of offerings, but simply a case where a packer here and there has a small surplus which he wants to close out before freezing weather and is willing to shade the price rather than carry the goods through the winter. It is pretty generally believed that this reaction is only temporary, and the packers who have facilities for carrying the goods are not at all disturbed over the present condition of the market, but on the contrary are glad to see these remnants cleaned up, so as to make a healthier condition next spring and summer.

We are having quite a lot of inquiries for future tomatoes and it seems the trade are more anxious than ever to get quotations. It would be very unwise, however, for a packer to make a price without some definite idea of the cost of production, and it has been figured out by a competent committee that the increased cost of packing No. 3 tomatoes would be anywhere from 20 to 31 cents per dozen over last year, depending on the price of cans and raw stock. As soon as we are in a position to quote prices, will notify the trade.

The market on corn is in good strong shape and offerings are very light.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Herrings of all kinds are selling freely and the market is in a very healthy condition and prices steady and strong. We have been in hopes up until now of getting at least a few shipments of Norway mackerel, but communications received to-day from Norway report that there is absolutely no chance of getting any real good Norwegian mackerel this season. Our friends report that just one parcel of unassorted mackerel was sold, which probably was destined for the American market, but the quality was so inferior that our agent did not care to handle them for our account. Most of the Norwegian mackerel caught this season has been sold to foreign countries at very high prices, and in an unassorted way.

The demand for imported oil sardines of all kinds continues very good. Supplies are just about sufficient to cover the demand, and prices show no sign of weakness—on the contrary. The fishing in Norway, unfortunately, has been rather poor right along and suitable goods are hard to obtain and only at steadily advancing prices.

Strohmeyer & Arpe Co.

New York.

Sugar.

Refined Sugar.—The market has ruled quiet, with an easier tendency in sympathy with the weak and lower raw market. All refiners are quoting basis fine granulated 7.15 cents, regular terms. It is possible to buy in instances at slightly below this price. The demand is light and for immediate requirements only. We see nothing in the situation to warrant buying ahead of actual needs, and think it is advisable to continue the hand-to-mouth policy. All refiners can ship immediately.

Raw Sugar.—The market has ruled dull and easier, with sales reported 5,000 bags Cubas on the spot at equal 5.27 cents, duty paid to the American, showing a further decline of one-eighth to-day. The market closes very quiet.

J. H. Huston Co., Inc.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Spices.

The market is very active. There is a very uneasy feeling as to the future supplies and possibilities. We had some startling advances during the week and further changes are very possible. The domestic demand is large and the export needs are exceedingly broad.

Pepper.—Demand has been large and prices quoted by foreign shippers are higher. Prices have therefore been advanced here sharply on black pepper. Whites are also firm, with upward tendency.

Red Peppers.—Rather quiet during the week, with only routine trading.

Cloves.—Are a shade firmer in all positions, though notably unchanged.

Pimento (Allspice).—Very firm and in good demand at steady figures on spot.

Mace.—In better demand at generally steady, but unchanged prices.

Nutmegs.—Supplies here are small. The market is firm. While figures have not been changed, there is every possibility of higher prices. In fact, prices in the Orient are higher on spot values.

Cassias.—Saigon and China grades both very active at higher prices. Stocks here are limited. Foreign markets are firm and higher.

Gingers.—Rather scarce and firm, though less active this week. Spot prices are based on very limited stocks. When sold out, prices will no doubt advance.

Paprikas.—Exceedingly scarce on spot and prices are firm. Some fresh arrivals are soon due.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Mustards of all kinds are active. Caraway is firm and in fair demand. Poppy scarce and likely to go higher. Sage and sweet herbs very active.

Making People Eat More Codfish

If you have an idea that codfish is codfish, you are as wrong as you can be. There are as many grades of codfish as there are of butter.

There is all the difference in the world between Gorton's Codfish and some codfish we could show you, which is perfectly pure.

Any one of your customers could detect this difference. Perhaps they have detected it and stopped using the codfish you have been selling them.

If all the codfish was like Gorton's, the consumption of codfish would increase five fold. Gorton's Codfish is pure, old-fashioned codfish of the finest quality money can buy. You can sell more of it than you can sell of any other brand, because more people will want it, and all that want it will want more of it. Your jobber.

Flavoring Extracts Are a Lot Better Than They Were, But There Is Still Some Fake

Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department Examines Two Hundred Samples and Makes Exhaustive Report. Still Some Deception in Manner of Labelling. Use of Word "Pure" Should Be Restricted.

For several months the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department has been investigating the purity and character of the flavoring extracts sold in the open market and within the State of Pennsylvania. A report on the result has been compiled and published as Bulletin No. 285 on "Flavoring Extracts." The analyses were made by State Chemists C. H. Lawall and Leroy Forman.

The bulletin is quite lengthy, and we take the following extracts from it:—

> In the preparation of the present bulletin over 200 samples were collected and such an examination was made and has been tabulated as would indicate to the analyst whether the product was in conformity with the standards. As the work was largely of an educational type, only such prosecutions were instituted as were made necessary by flagrant instances of adulteration or misbranding. The total number of such prosecutions was less than a dozen out of the entire lot of samples examined. In those instances, which were fairly numerous, where technical charges of misbranding in some minor particular might have been alleged, the manufacturer received a notice from the department calling attention to the points which should be corrected and suggesting the proper way of so doing whenever possible. These letters are a matter of record, and if at some future time another investigation is made of these products, no leniency will be shown to those who have failed to correct labels and claims after having had their attention called to the necessity for so doing.
> Examples were found of all kinds of extremes in labeling. They range from the simple statement of "Vanilla Extract" to statements making claims for superiority in quality and strength of the most ridiculously extravagant type. Certain points may here be explained with advantage. The word "Compound" was used at one time, before the advent of modern laws, to designate products which differed in strength, quality or purity from the genuine article. The word is totally inadequate and improper for this purpose.
> The use of such phrases as "highly concentrated," "double strength," "XXX," "unequaled in strength," "much stronger than extracts usually sold," etc., are usually unwarranted and are relics of the time previously mentioned when no standards existed, no laws were enforced and manufacturers of high grade goods had to use such expressions to show the proper ratio between their products and others bearing the same title. The National Association of Flavoring Extract Manufacturers particularly advises against the use of such expressions and they are becoming less frequently used than formerly, although they are still prevalent enough to warrant attention being called to them. It is unfair to the consuming public and unfair to the manufacturer of a full strength standard product, properly labeled without exaggeration, to permit a competitor to put upon the market an article not a whit better and label it in such a manner as to indicate that it is a superior product. The manufacturers themselves are realizing this and aiding in the enforcement of the laws providing for truthful labeling in every particular.
> The words "imitation" and "substitute," as previously mentioned, are often misused in being applied simply to weaker preparations. In the case of vanilla extract the words are correctly applied to preparations which are made wholly or in part from tonka beans or the synthetic odorous principles, coumarin and vanillin, with or without the addition of genuine vanilla beans. In these preparations, the actual flavoring power is often much greater than in genuine vanilla extracts, but the aroma, although resembling vanilla is quite different when tonka or coumarin is used. These imitation extracts are in fact preferred by some users to the more delicate genuine vanilla flavor and there is a wide and legitimate field for the sale of such imitation extracts when properly labeled to show the distinction and difference from the genuine article.
> It is a strange but true fact that some manufacturers will do almost anything to avoid the prominent use of the word "substitute." In one instance, the word "substitute" was in the same sized type as the word "Vanilla," but was so shaded as to be discernible only after a close examination of the package. Upon being communicated with regarding this apparent attempt to deceive the purchaser, the explanation was given that the printer had used the shading in order to create an artistic effect upon the label.
> The use of the word "pure" is continued by manufacturers because of the association of ideas that it carries with it of both quality and strength. That there is need for the education of the public along this line is shown by the fact that a manufacturer can make two lots of extract of vanilla, using cheap, low grade beans in the one case and expensive, high grade beans in the other. Both of these products may justly be entitled to the designation "pure" or, what is frequently seen, "absolutely pure," and both may be in conformity with the legal standards while the actual value to the consumer may be in the ratio of 2 to 1 in comparing the flavoring power of the two extracts.
> The conclusions to be drawn from the above investigation are as follows:—
> First. The use of poisonous constituents, as wood alcohol, acetanilid, prussic acid, nitrobenzol, etc., has been entirely discontinued by manufacturers, the only sample in which wood alcohol was found having been made fourteen years ago.
> Second. The flavoring extracts of the market are of much higher value than ever before, and much less frequently adulterated or misbranded, as is shown by less than a dozen cases for prosecution out of more than 200 samples examined.
> Third. There is need for education on the part of the purchasing public to enable intelligent selection to be made from the numerous products offered for sale.
> Fourth. Manufacturers should be compelled to avoid exaggeration and superlatives in the labeling of these products. Many manufacturers the highest grade prod have already taken this st and they should be prote from their unscrupulous c petitors. The word ext should be reserved on the l for the genuine article as fording an added means of tinguishing the two classe products.

———, Conn., December 15, 1916.

Note.—If this contributor will allow plain speaking, he showed himself an exceedingly easy mark. He does not say how much coffee he thought he was buying; apparently it is much under fifteen bags. The contributor fell into a trap which he opened for himself without a doubt. In the first place he should have read the order which he signed, and made sure that he understood it, and that it agreed with his understanding. And he should never have signed "slips of paper" without knowing what they contained. He has no legal defense at all, for he could have kept out of his present situation merely by reading over the papers he was asked to sign.—Ed.

ock on Hand Must Be Inventoried at Cost When Making an Income Tax Return rnal Revenue Department Says It Cannot Be Inventoried at Present Market Value. Ruling Is in Favor of Merchant for Under It He Pays Less Tax.

e have been informed directly he Treasury Department that ntory of merchandise on hand be calculated at the actual cost of the merchandise when com- g figures for purposes of in- tax return.

embers who have been seri- discussing the question of the on which the 1916 inventory ld be computed expressed a de- to know whether or not the missioner of Internal Revenue, sury Department, Washington, ., had formulated any ruling respect to this matter.

e accordingly addressed the sury Department stating that r present conditions stocks of handise in the establishments holesalers are, in many cases, reater value than at the time at h such merchandise was pur- ed.

our letter we wrote as follows:

Some business men feel that lues will continue high and vor calculating the inventory the present market price of e merchandise.

Other merchants, more con- rvative in method, declare that they intend calculating the inventory at the cost price of the merchandise.

Still a third class of merchants are inclined to strike an average between cost values and present market values.

The method pursued and the result secured under such method will materially change the showing in matters of profit and loss.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue replied and the following is a quotation from his answer:—

> The gross gain or loss is determined by taking from the gross sales plus the stock on hand at the end of the year the purchases plus the stock on hand at the beginning of the year.
> The stock on hand must be inventoried at cost, since the price at which disposed of will reflect any loss due to shrinkage or depreciation. For the same reason no deduction for depreciation on merchandise will be allowed under item 5b of the return, for to permit such would be, in effect, a double deduction.

A West Virginia Correspondent Says Profit Percentage Must Increase With Cost, But It is Not Really an Increase

Discusses a Recent Editorial on "What Is the Matter With Prices?" Which Told How Consumers Were Charged Thirty-five Cents Advance for a Book That Had Only Advanced Twelve Cents. Mr. Kettering Makes Clear Argument to Show Justification.

After reading your editorial, "What Ails Prices?" in issue of December 11th, I cannot refrain from criticising it and stating my views on the matter.

You state that the book publisher made a book that cost him 18 cents to produce. He sold it to the retail dealer at 30 cents and the dealer sold it again at 50 cents. Then the advance in raw materials forced the production cost to 30 cents with the result that the publisher charged the retail dealer 50 cents and the dealer again sold it at 85 cents.

You then point out that the consumer paid 35 cents more for an article that had advanced only 12 cents at first cost, which is correct. You say "it is legitimate but that in the end some of us will undoubtedly wake up to the realization that it was bad business." Right here is where I disagree with you. Everybody knows that no one can succeed unless he knows how much it costs him to do business, and the Federal Trade Commission claims that that is the reason for most failures—ignorance of cost accounting. The only way to find the cost is to divide the total expense by the total volume, which will give the percentage cost of doing business, and which must come out of the gross profits.

Now on this book proposition, it must have cost each of these people about 25 per cent. to do business because each of them made a gross profit of 40 per cent. at the old price. In order to make 40 per cent. gross one must add 66⅔ per cent. to the cost. When the materials advanced the production cost from 18 cents to 30 cents. Mr. Book Publisher simply added 66⅔ per cent. to 30 cents instead of to 18 cents, his former cost, and that made his price 50 cents. Mr. Retail Dealer did the same, which made his selling price 83⅓ cents, but imagine that would be an odd price for a book, so he sold it at 85 cents. So the only thing that can possibly be said against the transactions was that the retail dealer got 1⅔ cents more for the book than he ordinarily should have gotten. If these two merchandisers made too much money from the sale of this book, when it retailed at 85 cents, they also made too much when it retailed at 50 cents, because the profits for both dealers were identical at both stages of the market.

This not only is not bad business, it is absolutely imperative, as the Federal Trade Commission will tell anybody that cares to take the trouble to lay the above case before them.

To go to an extreme point, would you, Mr. Editor, advise selling a drug that costs $4 a pound at $4.10 because when it cost 30 cents a pound you sold it at 40 cents?

I would like to see the opinions of some of the other readers of this paper.

Also, I would like to see this letter published in your paper, as I think most merchants will agree with me in my contentions and for the further reason that I do not want to see anybody misled on ascertaining selling prices.

H. E. KETTERING.

Plans to Stop Spoilage of Food Products Like Canned Sardines and Fresh Poultry.

Government Found a Way to Kill the Spores That Formerly Caused a Loss of Thirty Per Cent. in Sardines Through Swells. Another Plan Saves Twenty-two Dollars a Carload in Shipping Poultry.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
December 21, 1916.

The recent report of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, indicates that extensive research and experimental work directed towards the prevention of spoilage in food products was done in that bureau last year.

A study was made of the organism causing spoilage in canned sardines. The loss to individual packers of sardines from swelling is sometimes as high as 30 per cent. of the pack. It was found th organism causing the spoilage rapidly forms spores, whic killed only at high tempera Experiments showed that wh cans were heated to high ten tures the spores were killed a swelling or spoilage resulted addition to processing at high peratures it is necessary t cleanliness in preparing and ing the sardines. The sardi dustry has largely adopted th ommendations of the bureau the correct methods of han preparing and packing the sar with the result that much loss spoilage has been prevented.

Experiments were made in nection with the shipment of shrimp. It was found that prepared in a clean manner, ably boiled in brine, and thor cooled, the shrimp could be sh for long distances in a prime tion. Many of the shippers adopted the recommendations Department as to the proper ods for handling the shrimp found them of great value conduct of their business.

In order to prevent spoila the shipment of poultry and a precooling plant has been oped, cooled by ice, capable of ing 15,000 pounds of eggs and try a week. This plant cos proximately $800 to install. ice at $3 per ton it has been in actual commercial use to ef saving of at least $22 per c in handling and chilling. It enables the small shipper who not afford to erect a comple frigerating plant to compete the largest shippers.

Do You Know the Figure Facts About Your Business?

Do your books tell you what it costs to operate your stores?

Do they show which departments or lines are profitable and which, if any, are not paying?

Do they prove beyond the possibility of a doubt that selling prices cover expenses and leave you a fair margin of profit?

Can you tell from them how your gross and net profits for this year compare with those of last year?

Do they tell you how often you turn your stock; how much stock you have on hand today and what this stock cost you?

Do they show when and from where your profits and losses come?

These questions may seem harsh and inquisitive, but they are not intended to be so.

They simply state some of the problems that are confronting business men today.

If you get this sort of information—know the answers to these questions—you are in a position to turn losing months into winning ones; to replace unprofitable departments or lines with profitable ones; in short, to manage your business wisely and successfully in the face of rising costs.

We are bankers and not systematizers, but, if you have been facing the old question of "Profit, profit—who's got the profit?" we may be able to help you find the answer.

This is an additional banking service which we offer to our patrons.

We will be glad to suggest ways by which you can discover the answers to the above questions, in reference to your own business. Our Business Building Bureau is an information service. There may be something in its files of value to you, so please feel free to consult us in confidence on such matters.

Newspaper Fakes on Retail Profits.

Last Sunday's Pennsylvania papers quoted James Sweeney, State Chief of Standards, as saying that bread bakers are making more profit than they should make. Believing that no public official should discuss retail profits in any line of merchandising unless he has special knowledge on the subject, I caused a letter to be written to Mr. Sweeney, asking him for answers to several questions regarding the average baker's cost of doing business, etc., the purpose being to learn whether he knew what he was talking about.

One newspaper account of what Mr. Sweeney said was as follows:

OFFICIAL SCORES BAKERS

Profits Exorbitant at Present, Chief of Standards Declares

From Public Ledger Bureau

HARRISBURG, Dec. 16.—Jas. Sweeney, Chief of Standards, issued a second statement today in which he severely criticises the bakers of the State who have increased the price of their bread either by cutting down the size of the 5-cent loaf or adding a cent to the usual price. The bakers, even with flour at its present price, are making more profit on a loaf of bread, he says, than they should. Under the plan that gave sixteen ounces for 5 cents bakers made a fair profit, he says, and the making of eleven-ounce loaves for 6 cents gives them a profit out of all proportion to the costs of high-priced materials. He said he would ask the Legislature to fix a standard size loaf.

Mr. Sweeney's answer to the letter from this paper is as follows:

Harrisburg, Dec. 20, 1916.

Grocery World Publication Co., 927 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Gentlemen:—

Complying with the request contained in your favor of December 19th, I am enclosing you copies of the statements relative to bread which I gave to the newspapers. I do not believe that you will find in either of these articles the statement that bakers are making more profit on a loaf than they should.

What you will find is that if the loaves are to be reduced in size, and then a price added, that it would be an injustice to the people. I have endeavored to show that the bakers who are baking an eleven-ounce loaf of bread at the price of flour on the date those articles were written were making more profit out of a barrel of flour than they did when flour sold at $5 a barrel and the customer received a sixteen-ounce loaf of bread; and that there was no apparent necessity for advancing the price of a loaf of bread unless they gave the people a sixteen-ounce loaf.

The baker's profit, waste, etc., are unquestionably figured in the 5 cents which he charges for the loaf of bread.

Very truly yours,
JAMES SWEENEY,
Chief.

I have carefully read the typewritten copies of Mr. Sweeney's statements and he is right. They do not quote him as saying what the newspapers said he said at all. So that the point here is different from what I expected it would be. Instead of being a revelation that another public official had butted into profit discussions without knowing what he was talking about, it is this: that the average newspaper, when it is discussing the question of profits and wants to say something appealing to consumers, has not the slightest regard for the truth.

"None of Them Have Done Anything."

A certain butcher put in canned goods and wrote his trade paper that after a few weeks he made 12 per cent. on the new department. The following is an interesting paragraph from his letter:—

When I first put the department in some of the grocers immediately around me threatened to get back at me by going into the meat business. All of them already sold ham and bacon and were really competitors of mine. So far none of them has really done anything. One of them expressed his opinion about the fresh meat business not long ago as being a game that he didn't care to tackle. I guess the others think pretty much the same way, judging from the way they have never carried their threats out. I don't blame them. The way the retail meat business is to-day it's financial suicide for an inexperienced man to go into it.

And probably none of these grocers will do anything—except complain over the inroads which this enterprising butcher makes in their business. No grocer need be afraid to go into fresh meats, provided he can get a good man to cut them. When prices are anywhere near normal, nothing he can sell will pay a better profit.

Every Pail on Its Own Bottom.

The Adjusting and Profit Committee of the San Francisco (Cal.) Retail Grocers' Association has started to do a thing which should have been done a long while ago. It is taking up an average retail grocery stock, article by article, and learning what pays a profit and what doesn't. The committee says that over 60 per cent. of the articles sold by a retailer are sold at a loss.

The following is from the committee's report:—

From data gained in many stores of different size and location in San Francisco it is shown that the average cost of doing business runs from 17 per cent. to 18 per cent. and in the larger stores as high as 20 per cent. These figures compiled under a uniform s tem of bookkeeping, supervi by men of experience a therefore, must be taken, as a general statement, but accurate.

Four main items are sho to comprise 30 per cent. of total grocery business don butter, eggs, sugar and flo These four items average per cent. profit on the sell price. The other 25 per c is made up of miscellane items which will be detai later on.

Commit These to Memory

Carrying your business in your hat instead of in a simple set of accounts may be a practice of some so-called business men, but experience shows that few hats are large enough to hold both the owner's head and his business.

The Week's Dry Goods Record.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale dry goods distribution for the current week is maintaining the large volume of the past few weeks and is running considerably ahead of the corresponding period of a year ago.

Road orders for both immediate and future delivery show good gains over the same week 1915.

Merchants have visited the market in larger numbers.

Collections are in excess of the corresponding week of past years.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

A New Year Trim.

To arrange, cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. ıg the front place tumblers of preservcs and cans of plum pudding. In , and in the center, place a large flat tray of eggs, and on either side ate of crackers. Then place a Dutch cheese and several rolls of snappy se, and on either side of the cheese, packages of fancy cakes. In the er of the window arrange half a ham on a platter and garnish with ley. On one side place a piece of bacon and on the other some sausage. veen these place bottles containing pickles, mustard dressing, sauce and es. At each extreme rear corner arrange cans of peaches and apricots, and ront of each display a dish of the dried fruit. In the center display rent kinds of cake on tall cake stands. Use evergreen ropes at the sides along the bottom and at the rear make a large star of it. Cut letters out pasteboard and cover with gilt paper. Across the center of the star tch two pieces of invisible wire. Place the letters against the wire, and old them securely fasten small paper stickers over the wire.

The Buying Public

Men and women, young and old, prefer to make their purchases in clean, bright, Electrically lighted shops. Those stores which are not equipped electrically, deliberately sacrifice to their competitors a considerable percentage of the best trade during the year. Electric Light is an advertisement as well as an illuminant—it will bring greater returns for less money than any other form of publicity.

New Food Distributing Department to be Created to Reduce High Cost of Living. Chain Store Enjoined From Selling Unmarked Storage Eggs. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, December 22, 1916.

Senator Wicks, chairman of the New York State Legislative Committee, which has been holding sessions in this city for the purpose of investigating the food supply, announced on Wednesday night that it would recommend to the next Legislature the creation of a new State department to be known as the Department of Foods. The purpose of the new department would be "to study, supervise and, as far as necessary, regulate this important division of the business of the State." The committee gives out the following statement as to what it thought such a department might accomplish:—

> It is proposed that municipal markets shall be encouraged. Every power necessary to their establishment and maintenance should be given by general statute to all the municipalities of the State. They should be subject to supervision by the proposed department in all except legal matters. If terminal facilities be lacking, special provisions for relief should be made by law.
> Other subjects to be dealt with are as follows: Regulation of the operation of storage and cold storage warehouses, grain elevators, etc.; coloring of ice cream and other food products by artificial dyes; protection of sheep by imposing an effective check on stray dogs; age at which veal calves can be sold for food; permitting the sale of skim milk in New York City; licensing of commission men, with penalty for a license trading at the same time on his own account, and supervision of country milk stations so as to insure fair and accurate butterfat tests, and to prevent unjust discrimination in price between different localities and individuals.

The effort of State Commissioner of Foods and Markets Dillon to compel everybody who sells cold storage eggs outside of their original packages to put the words "cold storage" on every egg has gotten into the courts. The James Butler Co., which operates a chain of grocery stores here, declined to obey the order and Commissioner Dillon had an injunction issued against them forbidding them to dispose of cold storage eggs unless they are stamped, provided they are sold out of their original packages. The injunction was issued to take effect December 23d.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet but undertone steady to firm. There is some talk of a tea duty but it has gotten no where as yet.—Coffee market fractionally higher for all grades of Brazils on account of continued peace talk. Domestic demand poor. Milds show no quotable advance, but the undertone is firmer. Java and Mocha unchanged.—Sugar very much unsettled and raws have sold down to 4.89 for February shipments. Granulated generally quoted at 7 cents.—Canned goods very dull. Tomatoes weak but nominally unchanged. Peas, corn and the balance of the list unchanged and quiet. All canned fish firm and high, but unchanged for the week.—Dried fruits neglected and will be until after the holidays. Prices on everything unchanged.—Wheat has rallied somewhat during the week on account of foreign demand.—Flour quiet, sales small; feeling still easier.

ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

Another Move to Reduce Oleo Tax.

Another bill to reduce the tax on oleomargarine from 10 cents a pound to 1 cent and to repeal the license tax on oleomargarine manufacturers was introduced in the House during the week by Representative Aswell, of Louisiana. Mr. Aswell said his bill would reduce the cost of a food consumed in this country at the rate of 150,000,000 pounds a year.

Benzoate Question Reaches United States Supreme Court.

Whether States may prohibit sale of food products containing benzoate of soda preservative, permitted under the Federal pure food laws, is a question the Supreme Court last Monday was asked to decide. Wisconsin's Food Commissioner appealed from a decision of Federal Judge Sanborn, holding that the Federal laws are paramount and Wisconsin's anti-benzoate of soda statutes unconstitutional.

They Deserved to Lose Their Money.

The National Credit Men's Association supplies the following:—

> It is apt to be hard to discover and appreciate humorous situations in credit granting, for they are as a rule expensive for those having part in the situation.
> A failure occurred in Kentucky. There were about eighty creditors. It looked like a suspicious case, and therefore one of the adjustment bureaus undertook to investigate with a view to ascertaining what if any basis there might be for criminal action.
> Bureau inquiries brought out the decidedly surprising information that not one of the eighty creditors had a financial statement, nor knew authoritatively who comprised the concern, for the two names in the firm style were such as to give no assurance as to whet the partners were man a wife, or father and son. man and wife, recovery wo be possible, as the wife financially able to pay the de of the concern; but if fat and son, one being a min offered no responsibility, a but little recovery could be pected.

More than fifty of the city grocerymen assembled at the hall at 53 South George street, and had the pleasure of hearing William Smedley, of Philadelphia, organizer of the Pennsylvania Retail Grocers' and Merchants' Association; William Crow, of Harrisburg, an official of the same organization, and also representatives of the wholesale houses of York. Mr. Gottleib, the temporary chairman, called the session to order and presented Mr. Smedley, who gave a most interesting talk on store efficiency and what can be done by each and every groceryman to bring about better conditions in his business. He paid particular attention to the subjects of cleanliness and display of goods and it is believed that more than one man present went home resolved to do all he can to become a better merchant. Mr. Crow's talk had to do with salesmanship as it has to do with increased store service and profits. The election of officers followed after which the assembly heard from C. H. Thomas, of the firm of Frey & Thomas; O. O. Ettline, of the Ettline Grocery Co., and D. G. Meckley, representing P. A. and S. Small Co. The meeting adjourned until January 3d. The place of meeting will be announced at a later date.

No. 395.—Seizing Goods En Route to an Insolvent Buyer.

Most readers hereof know something of the right of stoppage of goods in transitu, as it is known in the law, which is the right of a seller of merchandise who has shipped goods to a buyer, but learns before they reach their destination that the buyer is insolvent, to stop the railroad from delivering them. This letter enables me to say something about the matter which may be useful:—

Philadelphia, Pa.

We have a customer in ———— who has dealt with us for about eight years. He was formerly all right, but during the last year or so has been pretty unsatisfactory. He furnished a fair statement, and is well connected, but has lately been very hard to get money out of. He represented that this was due to the fact that most of his trade was credit. Last week he sent in an order for goods amounting to over $300. At that time his account was pretty well down, though he still owed us a small balance. However, we had heard that he had gotten some new capital and was going ahead under better conditions. We shipped the goods, which were sold f. o. b. our station, via the Pennsylvania, as usual, but not two hours after they had left we received a notice that the customer had called a meeting of his creditors. We at once notified the Pennsylvania not to deliver the goods, and they agreed not to, but in some way they slipped through and were delivered. Our lawyer now says we can collect only our per cent. of the assets if the customer goes into bankruptcy. Please advise if we have any recourse against the Pennsylvania.

R. McM. & Co.

My judgment is that you can collect all of your loss from the railroad company. If the bill was $300, and the bankrupt estate pays 20 per cent., or $60, you have a good claim against the railroad for $240.

Let me explain the main points about the legal right of stoppage in transitu.

Ordinarily when A buys goods of B f. o. b. B's station, title to them passes to A when B delivers at the station, and if anything happens to them after that, the loss is A's. In one case, however, the law allows B to retake those goods after title has passed to A, and that is where certain conditions have arisen which allow B to exercise the right of stoppage in transitu. In brief, those conditions are as follows:

1.—The goods in question must be unpaid for.

2.—They must be on their way to the buyer, but not yet arrived.

3.—The buyer must be insolvent, or unable to pay his debts.

If the law allowed A to have the goods when he was insolvent, it would really be a fraud on the seller, who would then merely get a percentage of a bankrupt estate, possibly a very small percentage. The law holds that it would be inequitable to deprive the seller both of his goods and most of his money, so it allows him to seize them while still in the railroad's custody.

If there is reason to believe that the buyer is insolvent, the law holds the goods to be unpaid for even though the seller has accepted notes in payment and those notes are not yet due.

You can seize goods under the right of stoppage in transitu, any time after they have been delivered to the railroad company, and before they have been handed over to the buyer. Even though they have reached the city of their destination, and are on their way to the buyer in an express wagon, they can be reclaimed, and if the transportation company gets the notice in time, even up to the very minute when the driver is about to unload the goods on the buyer's sidewalk, it is its duty to send them back.

Of course if they have actua passed into the custody of buyer, nothing can be done.

In these cases controversy of arises over whether the buyer insolvent when the right of st page is exercised. It cannot exercised unless he is, but insolv docsn't mean that he must ha actually gone into bankruptcy made an assignment. He must unable to pay his debts, and he m have either become insolvent af he bought the goods, or before, if he was insolvent before, the sel must not have known of it, or loses his right.

It is exceedingly dangerous seize goods in this way witho pretty convincing proof of the bu

Selling Talks With Clerks

Condensing Shelf Room.—Not long ago I happened into a store and saw a helter skelter arrangement, especially on the shelves. One shelf was taken up with something like forty cans of potash, another was jammed full of Royal Baking Powder, another was entirely taken up with one brand of molasses. This is all wrong. A dozen of any of these is sufficient, nicely faced and even with the edge of your shelf. Condense things—especially back of the working space. It saves hundreds of steps. Step saving is time saving. Be sure and have a ticket over every line of goods. Keep the ready sellers right at hand and keep the goods that there is a profit in continually on display, changing the location once a week. Sometimes on the counter, sometimes in the window, sometimes arranged on the floor. Get your customers familiar with the goods. It's next best to printed matter. It impresses. It brings the real thing under the eye. It shows you mean business.

Never Talk "C. O. D."—When you have finished taking an order figure it up and tell her the amount. Never say, "Shall I send it C. O. D.?" Get the money. I don't infer that you should show any unpleasantness about C. O. D.'s. But just take it that it's a spot cash order. C. O. D.'s take the driver's time. Takes the bookkeeper's time, and there's an uncertainty about the woman being home, anyway, when the goods arrive. It's one of those little things that need tact. You're doing good work when you break the habit.

The Sick Habit.—This isn't the place to exploit my own notion of sickness, but I will say, and I say it from many years of actual observation, that in ma cases it is largely a habit. Be asham to admit that "tired feeling." Don't on record as an absentee because of apparent out-or-order stomach or a lit whirling in your head. Jump out bed in the morning and shake yourse and get out into God's pure air, sayin "This is a day of health and succe for me." Get away from the "si habit," or some day you'll think it reality instead of error.

Ever Serve Butter?—If you have good butter that you want to push believe the best way to do it is to ser it on a plain cracker. Don't you kno it's hard for a woman to get away fro that argument? If you've got the good young man, there is no excuse for he going elsewhere for butter and payin you her good money for other thing Supposing she has her "butter man, and supposing he is a good fellow, tha doesn't enter into it from your side the boss needs that end of her busines and he'll get it, too, if you're up t snuff. That's all.

Don't Do It Again.—We have all ou little or big bunch of mistakes on rec ord. Such is life. But the fellow tha makes them the second and third and tenth time is a fool. A mistake is the most effective education we get. The man that accepts it in that spirit is safe. Make up your mind that "that thing won't happen again." Don't care what the nature of it may be, shun it as you would shun the devil. That's the way, and the only way, to turn the trick. That's what shows brains and stamps the man—a man.

insolvency, for if he is solvent can not only make you deliver, can make you pay damages for detention. There are a couple other points which it is well to tch in such cases: 1—has the er transferred the bill of lading somebody else? If he has, the ler cannot stop them en route; did the buyer sell them before y were seized? If he did, the ht is also lost, for in both es, title has passed to a third ty.

Question: * * *, Reading, Pa.—party buys goods and pays regu- ly for some months but then only ys $5 at end of week and at other ies will pay $10 or $15. The ac- int reaches $100 or nearly that, ien the party informs the grocer y will receive an inheritance of eral hundred dollars and he will his pay in bulk and showed the ocer the papers that the money s to be paid September 15th.

The mother bought the goods from the grocer personally up to this time, but since that time the children come for goods.

The grocer asks the oldest son (18 years) why his mother does not pay the account she said she would when the inheritance was received. He replied he did not know, as the parents did not talk about those things in their presence. Since September their payments have been very irregular. Some Saturdays they pay $5, then omit one week; following week pays $10 or $15, but at present purchases not more than half former purchases. Some weeks they also pay cash till Thursday, when a book is used.

What is the best course to take in this case?

If party attempts to move out during night or day time, what action should be taken?

Can any legal action be taken for false misrepresentation?

Answer.—If this customer obtained further credit by a representation that an inheritance was forthcoming, this being a falsehood, she can be arrested for false pretense. If she did get the inheritance, but spent the money in other ways, she cannot be arrested, for she was not guilty of fraud. She merely broke her promise. In either event, I advise getting an active lawyer on the job either to bring criminal or civil proceedings, whichever the facts will justify.

The Critical Greek Currant Situation.

It was hardly to be expected that American merchants would buy Greek currants as heavily as in former years in the face of such prices. As a matter of fact, exports of currants from the Patras district to the American market for the period from August 23d to October 31, 1916, were only 2,187 long tons, as compared with 5,078 tons for the corresponding period of 1915. To the first figure may be added 800 to 1,000 tons of fruit already sold to American buyers and awaiting shipment. Reputable currant merchants state that of the 50,000 tons of fruit now available perhaps 20,000 tons are of inferior quality. It appears that many growers, attracted by the high prices offered at the opening of the season, gathered their fruit from the drying grounds before it was thoroughly dried in order to get it to market quickly. Perhaps, too, the ravages of peronospora had harmful effect on the fruit. At any rate buyers report a large quantity of fruit with high percentage of moisture, and already tending to ferment. American buyers might do well, when placing orders in future, to take such steps as will insure them the delivery of the actual grade of fruit specified in the order. It would appear, from complaints reaching this consulate in past seasons, that buyers have not always been satisfied with the fruit they received.

Here Is Something That Asks a Selling Question of Every Woman Who Comes in Your Store

You think you only sell Jar Rings in the Fall, but if you will put the Good Luck Silent Salesman on your counter you will be surprised at the number of steady orders you get all the year round. See cut.

The Silent Salesman asks every woman who comes in your store, "Don't you need Jar Rings?"

If she needs any jar rings, she needs Good Luck Rings, for everybody needs the best jar rings she can get. Too much depends on a jar ring to take any chances with it. Good Luck rings are made of live, resilient rubber that lasts for months. They never go back on the housewife who uses them. They even stand up perfectly when used in connection with the very exacting cold pack method.

One Sure Way of Selling Goods.

Every once in awhile I meet a woman salesman on the road. She travels for a New York dry goods house and she's a little hustler from Hustlerville. On the job every minute and I'm glad she ain't in groceries, for if she was working against me I'd have to sit up all night to get ahead of her.

She's a bug on the idea that a woman can go out on the road and sell goods as well as a man. In any line at all, from coffins down. Maybe she can in woman's stuff, like dry goods, but she can't in other lines, take it from me. Her and I have had some peppery fights over that, and I always end up by saying that if all the women was like her, maybe they could, but they all ain't like her. She hates that kind of talk like a kid hates candy, so we always come out of the fight feeling good.

The other day she come at me with a new one. She heard of a salesman for a wholesale grocery house who was took down with rheumatism and couldn't go out. He was plumb tied to his bed and as he worked mostly on commission, it looked like they'd starve to death. So she went down to the house, got his territory, and went out over it on his regular trip.

She did 30 per cent. more business than the best trip he ever had. "What have you got to say now about a woman not being able to sell goods?" she said to me last week.

"Same thing as I've always said," I said. "That ain't selling goods. She had the way greased for her. All she did was to go out and tell her husband's customers, 'Bill, or Charlie, or Ed's sick, and we'd have starved to death if I hadn't come out. I know you ain't going to turn me down under those circumstances.' Anybody'd give her an order on that story, whether they'd have give her husband one or not. That ain't selling goods at all. That's begging!"

"Oh, pooh! pooh! and pooh, pooh!" was all she said to that. "'Twasn't so at all," and so on and so forth.

But it was so all right. You fellows know that. Why I don't know anything on earth that can get orders like feeling sorry for the fellow that's asking for 'em. I used to know a chap that had been on the road for a shoe house for eight or ten years. He wasn't a bad salesman though he'd never be a world beater. The trade liked him some, and he made a living, but not a heap more.

His wife died. He thought the world of her and he put on black clothes for her. It hit him hard, poor devil. Pretty tough when your wife goes—if she's the real goods. I often say it's hard to lose some wives, but it's impossible to lose some others. Howsomever, when he went out on his regular trip he had his black suit on and he was all broke up. Talked to all his customers about it, and had 'em feeling sorry for him and everything.

He did 50 per cent. more business that trip than he ever did before. Now what have you got to say to that? His black suit and his loss just softened everybody up and they threw business at him. I don't mean that he worked that at all—not at first, but when he saw what it did, he worked it afterward, just as long as he could. Another shoe man told me about it—said it got to be a joke in the trade.

The last time I heard about this fellow he was thinking about killing off his mother. He could do that. It would be a cinch for a chap with a big family. He could kill off a new one say every two months and by the time the family was all gone, he'd be rich and could lay off.

Why one time after I'd been on the road for three or four years I had typhoid. Had it right—took me over two months to get on my feet and I lost the Lord knows how much weight. Even then the doctor said I hadn't any right to go out, but things were pushing me and I simply had to go.

When I come in off the road I weighed 204 pounds and was some baby. When I went out again I weighed 142, and looked like the next day was the date of my funeral.

D'ye know that I did more business that trip than I ever did before by darned near 50 per cent.? That's a fact. My customers were plumb sorry for me and they wanted to get me out quick so I wouldn't die in the house. They bought everything they could think of, because they wanted to say after I was dead, that they'd done the right thing.

I pretty near made enough extra out of that trip to pay the doctor's bill.

When I made the next trip I was better and had took on fifteen pounds or so. I didn't do anywhere near as good, but I did all right, because I was a sick man yet, don't you see. The trade was still sorry for me, but they wasn't as sorry as the first time.

The next trip I had got pretty near all of it back and my customers wasn't sorry for me at all. I didn't do as good that time as I ought to, because they still had some goods on hand from the first time.

That's the way it goes. If you can make a customer sorry for you, you've got your thumb on his ticklish spot and all you've got to do is to press it. Some of these times when business gets bum I'm going to buy a pair of crutches for $1.98 and go around on 'em. I don't know what that'll be yet—maybe an operation for gallstones or som thing. I'll bet I clean up big. If could only make my mind up have a leg took off, I'll bet wouldn't have to work at all aft that trip. I'd hate to do that, for I do say it as shouldn't, I've got t prettiest little set of legs in Pen sylvania!

A growing fondness for chocolat and cocoa is indicated in th greatly increased imports of crud cocoa into the United States during the last fiscal year. According t statistics compiled by the Bureau o Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, a total of 243,232,000 pounds were purchased abroad during the fiscal year 1916, which is 50,000,000 pounds more than was bought in 1915 and double the imports of 1910. This is not to be accounted for by decreased imports of manufactured cocoa and chocolate, because we are buying such products in about the usual quantities. Nor is it because we are shipping abroad larger quantities of prepared cocoa and chocolate. It is due solely to a growing taste for chocolate and cocoa, especially the former.

The Science of Retail Advertising

This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon reguest, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

I have from Sam V. Goodman, of yler, Texas, a copy of a newspaper lvertisement which he used in his cal paper on December 7th. It easured 4 inches double column, nd I am having it reproduced in e original size:—

McMenamin Crab Meat, a Most Delicious and Appetizing Sea Food.

When you eat McMenamin's Crab Meat you are not eating just crab meat. You're eating the BEST crab meat in the world. McMenamin Crab Meat has stood first for over a quarter of a century and the one which is the most used today.

It is not an accident that McMenamin's leads the field still, after all these years, it meets the requirements of ALL food laws everywhere.

HAVE SOME DEVILED CRABS ON THE SHELLS FOR DINNER TOMORROW. PER CAN WITH SHELLS, 35c.

SAM V. GOODMAN

"The Store That Pleases Everybody."

It seems to me as if a more appealing advertisement could be written for crab meat than this. Of course an opinion like this is merely a guess. Advertisements that you think will pull, often fall flat, and others that you think won't amount to much pull splendidly. So when I say I think an advertisement could be written that might get more results, I am of course only guessing at it, and I may be entirely wrong. And also, I don't know whether the above advertisement pulled or not.

* * *

Let me take this advertisement apart, and see if I can reconstruct it. There are, I think, too many words in the head. The word "sea" could have been omitted. I don't know whether crabs come from the sea or not, but I suspect not. Whether they do or not, the word "sea" adds nothing whatever to the heading of this advertisement. However, I shouldn't have used a head like this. I should have brought out the utility of crab meat right in the heading. Something like "Have Devilled Crabs for Supper To-night." Or "Ever Thought What You Could Do With Crab Meat?" Or "If Unexpected Company Comes, Have Devilled Crabs." There are a dozen ways in which the idea can be served up. I will rewrite the entire advertisement as I think it ought to be written:—

Hard Devilled Crabs for Supper Tonight

All you need is a tin of McMenamin's Crab Meat and the shells that go with it. McMenamin's Crab Meat is the best crab meat in the world, and has been for more than a quarter of a century. It is prepared down in Virginia, where the best crabs come from, and is one of the most delicious and quickest prepared dishes you can get. If a reserve can is in the pantry, you don't care who comes in at the last minute.

The Store That Pleases Everybody

Paradise, Pa., Dec. 8, 1916.

Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—I have a general store located about 9 miles east of Lancaster, along trolley line, which is a 30-cent fare return.

Now, we have some people of course who always buy their Christmas requirements at Lancaster. My object is to send out a letter in circular form to each and every one of my customers.

Of course my object is mainly to insist upon, or rather encourage home buying.

Will you help me in this by sending me what you would call a letter suitable for such an occasion, as referred to above.

I wish to mail them about the first of the week, beginning December 11, 1916.

Hoping to hear satisfactorily within a few days, I remain, thanking you in advance,

Very truly yours,

J. E. Denlinger.

I have written to Mr. Denlinger that in some way his letter got mislaid and only turned up a few days ago, too late to do anything about the Christmas circular. Even if the letter had been received in time, however, I would have advised him that no good circular or advertising letter could be written without a more intimate knowledge of goods and prices than he gives in his letter. I believe a general circular issued in such a case would be worthless. The only way to make your people buy at home is to show them where it would be profitable for them to buy at home, and nothing will do that so well as offering particular goods and quoting prices. That is exactly the way the mail-order houses get your customers to buy away from home.

Small Fruits Will Cost More to Pack Next Year.

The fruit section of the National Canners' Association now comes forward with a statement that small fruits will cost more to pack next year. A portion of the statement is as follows:—

> Cost conditions in 1917 will undoubtedly be much higher than ever before. No canner can afford to ignore this any longer.
> Basing the cost of cans, for instance, on the present cost of tinplate, and there is no hope of prospect for a decline in price, cans will cost from 30 per cent. to 40 per cent. more; cases will also cost about 10 per cent. more; labor has advanced, or will advance from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent.; labels and fuel, 100 per cent., and everything else that will go into the packing of canned food will be higher.
> The Committee of Cost Accounting at a recent meeting have gone over these matters very carefully, and picking out a few articles for illustration, have found the following advances that must be included in the cost:—

Columbian Red Raspberries, in No. 2 Tins.

	Est. advance per doz.	Est. rate of advance.
Fruit	$0.038	½c per qt.

Average advance, 30 per cent. to 40 per cent.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week and a quiet demand. There will be no change in the tea market at least for the balance of the year, as the trade are concentrating their attention upon other subjects. Prices show no change for the week but everything is firmly held.

Coffee.

The continued peace talk has had the effect that was predicted by this paper, of advancing the prices of Rio and Santos coffee from ¼ to ¾ of a cent. The reason for this is that if peace comes Europe, which is now closed particularly to the coffee traders, will be opened and a very large business will almost immediately ensue. The domestic demand for Brazil coffees is still poor. Mild grades show no change as yet, but will undoubtedly share in the advance if any advance comes.

Sugar.

The sugar market is still soft. Spot raws have been sold as low as 5.14, and sales for January and February shipments have been made as low as 5.02. This has caused the refined market to decline during the week, and practically all refiners are now quoting granulated at 7 cents. On the basis of the present raw market, it should be a ½ cent lower and unless something happens to raws about that much decline can be expected. The consumptive demand for sugar is poor.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. The situation is still firm. Compound syrup is in fair seasonable demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup and molasses unchanged and firm.

Fish.

The fish market is quiet, as it always is at this time of year. Prices on all grades of mackerel are firmly held, and it is possible that after the first of the year the prices may advance a little, because stocks are undoubtedly small. Cod, hake and haddock show no change, being still scarce and firm. Salmon of all grades has shown no change for the week, the public attention being concentrated on something else. Domestic sardines are very scarce and very high. There is no change in imported sardines.

Canned Goods.

Canned tomatoes are unchanged on last week's basis. There is no pressure to sell and very little inclination to buy. Corn and peas show no change for the week; demand seasonable. Apples quiet and still maintained on the recently reported high basis. California canned goods show no change and very little demand at the moment. Small Eastern staple canned goods are still scarce, ragged and high in price, but unchanged for the week.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans show a decline of about 20 cents a bushel during the week, owing to weakness in the primary markets. The demand is moderate. Marrows are unchanged for the week; demand light. California limas are about ½ cent lower on spot, although the Coast market is unchanged and is about ½ cent above the parity of the Eastern market. Green and Scotch peas still very high and unchanged.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm but unchanged for the week, with a good consumptive demand. Receipts are light and strictly fancy butter is still very scarce. Undergrades, however, are a little freer. No immediate change is in sight.

Eggs.

The market for fresh eggs is firm and unchanged, with moderate receipts and a fair consumptive demand. There is cold weather in the producing sections and Southern eggs have not yet started to arrive. The market on storage eggs is firm and unchanged with a good demand. Stocks, generally speaking, are light and the market is likely to hold up for a while.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady with a light consumptive demand. Receipts are very light and are showing defective quality. Advices from the country markets show an inclination to decline, and this is helped by the present lack of export demand. A decline of 1 to 1½ cents a pound is not unlikely.

Dried Fruits.

There is no change for the week in dried fruits, the market being neglected in everything. Prunes, apricots and peaches are all unchanged on last week's basis; demand quiet. The Raisin Association has found that it will have more sultana raisins than it expected, and will, therefore, deliver about 15 per cent. more than it promised some time ago, making a total delivery of 90 per cent. Currants remain nominally unchanged although some of the holders have cut prices during the week of about 1½ cents a pound.

Provisions.

Smoked meats are a little weaker for the week and show a decline of about ½ cent, due to the heavy consumption of poultry and fresh pork. Pure lard is steady and unchanged, with a fair demand. The production is light owing to the fact that the hogs are killed earlier than usual this year and are not in their usual fine fat condition. Compound lard is unchanged but an advance is expected within a week or ten days owing to the situation in cottonseed oil. Dried beef is firm and unchanged with a good demand. Barreled pork is steady and dull. Canned meats firm and unchanged.

Poultry.

Before the warm spell struck the market about the middle of the week, turkeys were ruling at 31 to 33 cents a pound. The warm weather caused a decline of from to 2 cents but not more than th The demand is fair and prices qui reasonable. Ducks were rath scarce, particularly the fresh fan ducks, and the market ruled at to 26 cents. Geese are also scar at 22 to 23 cents. Fowls ruled 24 to 25 cents. All poultry h been about 25 cents above last yea

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORT

Rice.

The movement for the past week h for the most part been of a somewh reassorting character, and with the ho iday period now actually confronting u no liberal operations are likely to undertaken before the New Year. Prin fancy Honduras are in scant supply a are commanding a premium. Receip are far below normal, due to the ge eral car shortage and embargoes st existant throughout the rice belt, and consequence the assortment of stoc are very poor, as almost every arriv is sold prior to its receipt at this poi

In our line of business the last fe months of the year usually show th largest amount of sales, but with th approaching holidays, business, as a rul slackens and gives our employees chance to get a much needed rest. Sugar.

Refined Sugars.—The market con- ıes unchanged and quiet. All re- rs are quoting basis fine granulated cents, regular terms; although it is sible to buy from some refiners at htly below these prices. The demand been fair, but all for immediate uirements. We think the hand-to- uth policy of buying should be con- ıed. Most refiners can ship prompt- although shipments in transit are ving slow, owing to storm condi- ıs, and this has also interfered more less in making deliveries this week.
Raw Sugars.—The market has ruled ier, with sales reported 60,000 bags bas in port, at equal 5.14 cents, duty d, to American and Howell; also 000 bags new crop Cubas for Feb- ıry-March shipment at equal 4.89 ıts, duty paid, to Howell.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

We have been saying right along that e of the very few articles that has shown any proportionate advance ce the beginning of the war was olive Now olive oil seems to be following the footsteps of other foodstuffs. ices during the last few weeks have vanced by leaps and bounds. freights higher, war risk insurance is higher, nplate from which the cans are made higher, the barrels in which the olive is shipped are very scarce and almost attainable in the olive producing ıntries. Shipping facilities are get- g scarcer. so it is no wonder that ces for olive oil have advanced, and r people in Italy tell us that we may ok for further advances, particularly the crop which was expected to be very good one, is turning out not half good as expected. We are having a rd time, indeed, to secure the right ality for our Re Umberto Olive Oil, cause we don't import anything but e very best that money can buy for s brand, and we have to pay big ney for what we are getting. For- ıately, we are getting our supplies, d hope that they will not run short ıe demand continues excellent and it ems that the American people are be- ıning to use olive oil more and more ery day. Spices.

The market continues very active. Conditions remain unsettled, due to scarcity in so many grades and the uncertainty of shipping. Higher rates are now demanded for war risks on ocean tonnage.

Pepper.—Europe and the East are all higher in all grades. Our market is higher and has advanced during the week. Stocks are very short and indications point to further advances after the turn of the year.

Red Peppers.—In better demand at very steadier prices. The supplies here are very small.

Cloves.—Very active and higher, both here and abroad. There has been some large buying during the week. Indications point to very much higher prices.

Pimento (Allspice).—In wide demand at present. Higher prices are now quoted in Jamaica. Prices here are firmer, with a hardened tendency.

Mace.—Very much higher abroad, though unchanged here.

Nutmegs.—In wide and active consuming demand. Prices are stiffening in all grades and in all markets. Supplies here are very limited at present.

Cassias.—Higher prices are quoted from China and freight room is almost obsolete. Batavia and Saigon grades are firm, but unchanged.

Gingers.—Rather quiet at unchanged prices. with no features to report.

Tapiocas.—Very strong and active at slowly advancing prices for pearl, though flake is unchanged.

December 18, 1916.

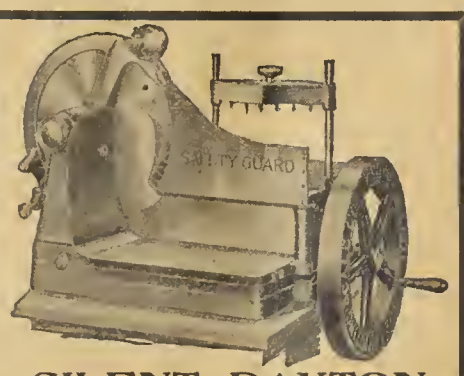
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I gave an order for ten cases of well known goods at a price, also the jobbing house through which they were to be shipped. The jobber's salesman was in my store at the time and accepted the order. I also specified date of delivery. They have never been delivered, although the jobbing house stands ready to deliver when the manufacturer delivers the goods to them. The manufacturer has directed the New York branch to deliver the goods to the jobber and I have their letter to that effect. The sore is, I don't get the goods and the cure I want to know. What is the value of the American Manufacturers' Association specialty stamp if it doesn't deliver.

Thanking you in advance, I am,
Yours truly,
M. VAN NESS BRAMAN.

P. S.—The goods ordered are nationally advertised.

Of course the specialty stamp has nothing to do with a situation like this. Your order was first with the manufacturer, with direction to ship through a certain jobber. But when the jobber's salesman accepted the order and agreed to deliver, the transaction was between you and the jobber and it is still between you. We should demand delivery from the jobber, as he is clearly responsible on your statement of facts. Even though the manufacturer will not deliver to the jobber, the jobber has no defense against you unless he has a contract with you which makes that a defense.



Store Prestige

Regardless of courteous salesmanship and prompt delivery service, the greatest factor in the successful operation of a retail store is what is sold and its quality.

The wise dealer knows this. He knows, too, that National Biscuit Company Products give his store a reputation for quality, a prestige that makes new customers and keeps old ones.

Through nation-wide advertising N. B. C. crackers, cookies, wafers and snaps are well and favorably known almost everywhere. Display N. B. C. Products in your store. Your customers will ask for them by name.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SILENT DAYTON
No. 10 MEAT SLICER

More Dayton Slicers are being sold than all other makes. There's a mighty good reason behind the marvelous growth of this new industry, and the reason is that there is nothing like it on the market at any price. It is the acme of perfection.

These Manufacturers Will Gratuitously Send Retailers Advertising and Display Matter

In various ways the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has always directed the especial attention of its readers to the question of pushing nationally advertised products to the front. Monthly Contests have been held on the subject, and a half-page advertisement published weekly contains arguments by nationally-known manufacturers for featuring nationally advertised products in order to get the benefit of the extensive advertising which these manufacturers are doing for them. In connection with this retailers will want to know what manufacturers will supply advertising and display matter free of charge, hence the following list:—

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Here Is the Contract That Did It:

Every jobber who handles stamped specialty orders gets the following agreement from the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association:—

> The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association further agrees that should any of such orders prove to be non-genuine or unauthorized and the goods, delivered in pursuance thereof, refused and returned for such reason, the member of this Association giving such order will pay to the above named Distributor (the jobber) the profit which would have accrued to such Distributor had the goods been duly accepted; provided, however, that the Distributor immediately upon the return of the goods, returns to the manufacturer, the aforesaid member, the original order with the reason for such return duly noted.

This is what revolutionized the specialty order business and made a stamped specialty order mean more than the unstamped order ever could have meant.

The jobber regards the stamped order as so much profit made and collected.

You, the retailer, are the direct beneficiary of this revolution, for now you get what you order and you get it at once—provided, of course, you have taken the precaution to see that the order bears the specialty stamp.
